See how this new B. F. Goodrich tire OUTWEARS PREWAR TIRES

Order these new tires now for your car

THE two tires you see here have spent their entire lives together—running on the same car. They have covered exactly the same number of miles, under the same driving conditions, over the same roads. They were shifted from wheel to wheel so that there could be no possible advantage for either.

difference. And this is no isolated case. These new tires have passed nearly 17 million miles of tests—on taxi fleets, police cars, and on B. F. Goodrich test cars.

The new tire has a wider, flatter tread that puts more rubber on the ground, spreads the wear over the whole tread surface. And even wear means longer wear! The tire body, or carcass, is stronger, too . . . made that way by using tougher cords and more of them.

You can forget all your worries about "wartime tires" if you get one of these new B. F. Goodrich Silvertowns—they've proved that they will outwear prewar tires. They've passed the toughest tests anyone can give them in the laboratory or on the road. Supplies are still limited, of course, but we're making and shipping these new tires every day and hope to have much larger quantities in the hands of most dealers within the next few months. The B. F. Goodrich Company, Akron, Ohio.

Most housewives know that they're judged by the freshness of the air in their homes. Yet, until very recently, it has been almost impossible to control the unpleasant odors of cooking foods...the odor of stale tobacco smoke...and other inevitable household odors.

air-wick*...the little bottle with the magic wick...is a revolutionary new scientific discovery which makes indoor air country-fresh...and kills all unpleasant household odors...at a cost of only a penny or so a day.

There's nothing to light...nothing to burn. Simply open the bottle and pull up the wick a few minutes before you start cooking. Keep a bottle open in the living-room whenever you expect heavy smoking. Use air-wick to freshen stuffy closets and bathrooms...bring country-fresh air into the nursery and sick-room. air-wick is not a perfume. It is not an "antiseptic". It has no "medicinal" smell. air-wick contains chlorophyll...the miracle-working substance which nature uses to freshen the air in garden and forest. You'll find air-wick at all better stores.

"GREAT AMERICAN"

Sirs:

I sincerely hope and pray there are not many Elliott Fanslers in America who would consider it necessary to correct LIFE (Letters to the Editors, Feb. 18) for calling a great Roman Catholic "priest, statesman, poet and executive" a great American! We all know (or do we?) that love of God and love of country go hand in hand.

Therefore any great Roman Catholic American deserves the privilege of being simply called a great American. This is still true of any great man—Elliott Fansler notwithstanding—he be Protestant, Catholic or Jew. Perhaps this national brotherhood week was needed after all.

I repeat: it is only necessary to mention a few performances of Spellman's church against religious minorities in Italy, Spain, Portugal, Argentina, Mexico and the U.S., against

Sirs:

LIFE readers will be interested to learn that T/Sgt. Ralph Neppel, Carroll, Iowa has been discharged from the Army at McCloskey General Hospital, Temple, Texas.

The sergeant added a few more prized possessions to the Congressional Medal of Honor awarded him by the President at the White House last September (LIFE, Sept. 3). As this new picture shows, he now has (1) a lovely wife, the former Jean More, Lidderdale, Iowa; (2) two new artificial legs to replace his own lost at Birgel, Germany; (3) two more chevrons, a promotion from sergeant to technical sergeant.

SELECTIVE SILENCE

"SELECTIVE SILENCE"! No one who doesn't wear a Sonotone "600" with Bi-Focal Control can ever guess the wonder in those two words . . .

Here's what they mean, to hearing aid users: You can wear a Sonotone and hear satisfactorily, in almost any kind of racket! At last you can go where the crowd goes . . . into the clamor and excitement of noisy places . . . and be at no greater disadvantage than your normal hearing neighbor.

Even in busy streets where horns, voices, brakes and signals build a pyramid of sound, you just switch on your Bi-Focal—go ahead and talk and listen—with less strain and fatigue than ever before possible with a hearing aid.

And then you go into a quiet place where you need every fraction of hearing. Click! your Bi-Focal switches off again . . . and just hear your Sonotone "600" perform!

Its great new power and sensitivity bring you a quality of hearing never experienced with any previous hearing instrument! It gives you farther hearing, picking up the delicate natural inflections, overtones and undertones of varied voices at really useful distances!

And when you speak, you have positive voice control because you hear your own tones. A degree of hearing that millions have hoped for and never expected to find!

"Selective Silence" is one more advance in Sonotone's continuing campaign for better hearing. In 225 Sonotone offices, and at 1511 regularly-held Sonotone Hearing Centers across the nation, trained Consultants are working day by day with more than a hundred thousand people. As they give never-ending help and counsel to this reborn multitude, they discover the need for new Sonotone wonders—to be produced for you in the world's largest laboratories exclusively devoted to hearing instrument research and service.

Your fine article on Dimitri Mitro-

Athens where we stored up many musical memories and made some enthusiastic prophecies for his career.

It was impossible to see what he was accomplishing with the semiprofessional orchestra, to note his uncanny memory for scores, to feel the vibrant strength with which he seemed to draw a smooth fluidity of sound from every wall and crack of the old theater, without realizing that the world was waiting for him. . . .

Often, as he developed a symphonic crisis, we feared for the not-too-sturdy podium, which would vibrate and bend under him. The podium always held, however, and the somber, swaying sorcerer became next day the calmest of Athenian citizens, striding through the traffic on University Avenue or drinking coffee with a friend. He was a careful dresser then, too, usually in neat gray flannel or

HOMESICK VETERAN

Sirs:

All you read about these days is the point system and veterans returning to the U. S. We have a veteran aboard this ship who we believe has seen as much action as anyone but who has no chance of returning to the States. The veteran is a black dog named Blacky.

In June 1944, at the age of two months, she was brought aboard ship by some of the boys at Pearl Harbor and has been part of the crew ever since. She has participated in the D-day landings at Leyte, Mindoro, Lingayen Gulf, Subic Bay, Okinawa and Iheya Shima. She is a veteran of 123 enemy air raids and was in at the finish with us when we made the occupation of Korea. She was plenty scared under fire but never once did she fail to man her general quarters station in the radio shack. Now we are doing repatriation work between China and Japan and Blacky is still with us.

Since the end of the war the crew has been breaking up and now there are only four of us from the old crew left on board. We expect to be returned to the States soon but there is no hope for Blacky. The ship may never return and we hate to think of leaving Blacky out here. We believe that she is entitled to a home and the comforts of civilian life as much as any one of us, and we have the home for her but no way of getting her there, for the present regulations do not permit it. We are writing this in hopes that you or some of your readers may be able to help us solve our problem.

All you dog lovers take a look at your own dog and you'll know how we feel.

... JAP GAMBLERS DECORATE SELVES WITH ELABORATE TATTOOS

In Japan 250 years ago it was a police practice to tattoo criminals for identification before letting them go. The police years ago abandoned this for fingerprinting, but Japanese gamblers and other underworld characters have kept up the old custom and considerably embellished it. Today, as a kind of proud badge of their profession, they have themselves tattooed with elaborate designs that sometimes take six painful months to complete. The pictures on these pages show the artistic results the gamblers of one Japanese gang have achieved.

The job of getting these photographs was a complicated one for LIFE Photographer Alfred Eisenstaedt and Correspondent Richard E. Lauterbach. They were led blindfolded through muddy back alleys to reach the gamblers' hideout. After the photography they were led back blindfolded and the gamblers, taking no chances, moved to another hideout.

"LOST WEEKEND" HANGOVER

Milland is haunted by alcoholic he portrayed

by OLIVER JENSEN

The early morning sun was just barely glinting on the shiny tip of the Chrysler Building when a disreputable-looking character slipped quietly out of the alcoholic ward of New York's Bellevue Hospital and stumbled drunkenly west toward Third Avenue. He wore only a pair of white hospital pajamas and a shabby blue overcoat. His face was adorned with a three-day growth of beard. To passers-by on the nearly deserted street he was merely a hung-over bum, and only the small knot of cameramen behind the vanishing figure knew him to be entirely sober Ray Milland, busily enacting a scene from the movie The Lost Weekend.

At the corner of Third Avenue, Milland turned left, scuffing moodily until sure he was out of the field of the distant camera. Then he looked up, right into the eyes of an Irish cop.

"Just a minute, son," said the cop, grabbing him by the shoulder. "And where would you be going?"

"I'm making a picture," began Milland.

"Sure, sure," said the policeman, eying Milland's clothes with an experienced eye. "Right out of the psycho ward, eh?"

"Let's go find out about it, shall we?" said the cop, good-naturedly starting out for the police station with Milland in custody. Only after extensive argument and display of documents by the feverish director was the law convinced of the actor's true identity.

This lamentable state of affairs, by which Milland is continuously confused with the role he brought to life—dipsomaniac Don Birnam—has been dogging his daily life ever since. It is a burden and a bore but it is also a tribute to an excellent acting job, a tribute measurable not only by the plaudits of critics and industry—even the liquor industry—and the huge box-office grosses of The Lost Weekend, but in small financial ways as well. For example, most well-known actors like Milland receive from time to time direct requests for photographs from their feminine fans. Such requests, according to Milland, frequently used to be accompanied by small monies, dimes and quarters, to pay for the mailing and expense. Now, he says, he receives many letters enclosing two, three and even four single dollar bills. The letters ask not for the usual smiling portrait but for hideous poses of himself as the drunken Don Birnam. It is notable that most such requests come

"I want to make a confession"

PLENTY of people make mistakes, but few are as honest about admitting them as Mrs. I. O. Siler, who lives down in Mesena, Georgia.

She wrote us a letter recently, and her first words were: "I want to make a confession..."

What terrible thing had Mrs. Siler done? And why confess to us?

Well, it seems that her "sin" was to go along for years thinking Pequot Sheets were too luxurious to buy for her household of five. Until a good friend gave her a pair of Pequots. And then, says she:

"Being experimental-minded, I proceeded to make a detailed comparison between those Pequots and my lower-priced bed linens. I found I had been cheating myself shamefully!"

Not only did those Pequot Sheets last much longer, but, says Mrs. Siler:

"They were so comfortable, and so easy to keep white. From now on, my budget calls for Pequots, and Pequots only!"

If you are the hard-to-convince, "show me" kind of gal, there's nothing else to do but make your own comparison. Buy several brands of sheets, including Pequots, and see for yourself which gives smoothest comfort and longest wear.

But if you'd like to enjoy the best at once, why not benefit by Mrs. Siler's "confession"... and buy Pequots exclusively?

from men. In fact practically the only reasonable letter Milland has received came from a 13-year-old girl in Long Beach, Calif. who wrote, "I think your picture is the best peice of acting I've ever seen. Congragulations!!"

In spite of these heartfelt tributes, however, Milland has found the meed of success not unmixed with gall. The hideous truth began to dawn on him right after The Lost Weekend was completed. After a first screening of the rough cut of the film for members of the cast and others who worked on the production, Charles Brackett, the producer, led a small group across the street to Luccy's bar, a Paramount hangout, and ordered a round of drinks. Milland, who drinks very little, picked up his glass and raised it to his lips. Then his eyes wandered to the mirror behind the bar. He froze. The entire group, fresh from the movie, was staring at him with beady-eyed fascination.

Prototype of a drunk

A married man and a father, Milland, like most sensible motion-picture actors, spends most of his evenings at home, retiring early in order to keep the long hours required at the studio. Now he has new reasons. He is a man pursued by a cliché. Waiters in Hollywood restaurants and night-clubs have taken a hearty, sickeningly playful attitude toward his double personality. They shake their heads jovially when he orders a drink. "Better stay on that wagon, Mr. Milland," they tell him. In a nightclub the wine steward took his order in a loud stage whisper, returning presently with a colorless gin and tonic. Setting it down elaborately in front of Milland, he grimaced to the appreciative crowd at adjoining tables and observed loudly, "It's all right, folks. Just water, that's all!"

Driving along in his car the other day, Milland was noticed by a large party of sailors and their girls who passed him, wildly leaning out of their own car and shrieking, "Still on that bender?" In a drive-in sandwich stand a group of high-school boys and girls spotted him and immediately surrounded his car as they staggered about burlesquing by its longer polishing action!

● Are your teeth discolored by ugly smoke smudge—or other surface discolorations? Then make these 3 discoveries.

1 Most dentifrices disperse and stop polishing long before you finish brushing your teeth.

2 Your teeth need longer polishing action.

3 You get this longer polishing action from Iodent No. 2, made by a Dentist. It contains millions of tiny particles scientifically treated to safely polish teeth up to twice as long. They do not dissolve—but get finer, tinier as you brush. It's the way a jeweler polishes precious jewelry.

the role of Don Birnam. Whispers go up and down the back entrances on Milland's street in Beverly Hills as the cooks and maids discuss the town's prize "inebriate." "Does he drink much at home, Marie?" seems to be the prevailing question. One local storekeeper is convinced (without further evidence) that "any man who acts that way must have been drinking for 15 years." Several repetitions of this remark have led to what is now a firmly established belief in the neighborhood that Milland has been on a 15-year bat.

Even the people with whom he works, the supposedly unimpressible movie technicians, have caught the bug. Out on location one night not long ago Milland was beckoned to one side by several "grips" and electricians. They took him behind some wagons on a set and, with elaborate secretiveness, produced a bottle. "Here, Ray, have a snort," they whispered.

A household word

It was inevitable that Hollywood jokesmiths should adopt Milland as their own. Columnists use him frequently in gags like this: "So-and-so has invented a new type of home bar. When you want a drink you push a button and Ray Milland pops out and breathes in your face." Such is the illusion of the screen that Milland enters current popular folklore as a drunk, just as simple-minded Americans have typed Bing Crosby and Barry Fitzgerald, stars of Going My Way, as priests. And even The Lost Weekend itself has found a place in the language since "Let's lose a weekend" became a standard invitation to a drink.

From its early beginnings The Lost Weekend aimed at the very realism from which Milland is now a hopeless fugitive. Those who have seen the picture will remember that Birnam, desperately seeking money to buy liquor, walks for miles up Third Avenue, trying to pawn his typewriter.

Prudently deciding that no part of southern California or, for that matter, the entire world looks so much like New York's dingy Third Avenue as Third Avenue itself, the producing-directing team of Charles Brackett and Billy Wilder chose to make that part of the picture in New York. "Process photography," that is, the use of rear-projection background, they felt would not look sufficiently realistic. But the trouble they saved in duplicating Third Avenue's motley stores, hock shops and gin mills and in reproducing its rickety and ancient streetcars was, alas, offset by the special difficulties involved in making a big-time motion picture in the middle of a great city. The minute word gets around that a movie company is at work, vast, curious, unmanageable crowds collect and whole blocks become unusable. Thus it was necessary to disguise both the camera and the actor and to clothe the entire operation with a spylike secrecy.

Fooling the public

The scenes along the trek were photographed two blocks at a time, during regular business hours. Milland, stubby-bearded, badly mussed and without make-up, would sit waiting in a cab at the corner. By the corner would be a large, innocent-looking packing case of the kind which normally accommodates a piano or store-size refrigerator. Inside would be a hot, impatient cameraman who might have been waiting for hours, perhaps since 6 a.m. Across the street on the corner would be an assistant director as tip-off man. When he would wave to indicate the coast was clear, Milland would get out of the cab and start beating his way along the avenue, pausing first to rap a signal on the packing box with his typewriter case. On other occasions he would walk toward the camera. Still other times the camera would follow him along, shooting Exercise helps keep her regular...

What about you?

Does your daily work
rob you of time
for healthful exercise?
If so, perhaps you need Saraka,
to help you keep regular.

You know how it is... tied down all day to household chores... or sitting at an office desk. Then in the evening you sit some more... in the movies, at bridge, or just reading. And sitting isn't exercise.

This lack of healthful exercise can often leave you with a sluggish system. And when intestinal muscles get out of the habit of properly doing their normal work, they may become lazy.

Saraka can relieve your sluggishness the modern scientific way, with its happy combination of two pure vegetable ingredients... Bassorin and Cortex Frangula. They work smoothly together to help you to greater regularity.

Helps Intestinal Action

Bassorin absorbs water and forms the kind of soft, smooth BULK your system needs and often lacks.

Why BULK? It gives the intestinal muscles something to take hold of and helps the "kneading" action, so necessary to healthful elimination.

Bulk Plus Motility Does It

Then the specially prepared Cortex Frangula encourages intestinal muscles to keep waste products in motion. Thus, Saraka gives you BULK plus MOTILITY... the ideal laxative combination.

No Purging

With Saraka, results are so nearly natural that most people have no sensation of ever having taken a laxative.

There's no purging action. No violent irritation that whips intestinal muscles into frantic activity. No after-effect that leaves you weakened, tired and listless.

Instead, Saraka provides mild, thorough laxation that helps you to greater regularity.

Ask Your Doctor

We're confident your doctor will say you may take Saraka whenever needed. And it's pleasant to take... pleasant after taking. As you know, you should never take a laxative when appendicitis is indicated, for that reason we say caution: use only as directed.

If you lack time for healthful exercise and find you're constipated... you owe it to yourself to try Saraka. Get a package today, at any drug counter. Or, if first you'd like a sample, mail the coupon.

SARAKA, Department 458, Bloomfield, New Jersey.

Without obligation on my part please send free trial package of SARAKA.

Write your pen troubles away with this new ink!

SOLV-X IN PARKER QUINK WORKS THE MAGIC!

"S'MATTER, MOM, IS YOUR PEN STUFFED-UP?"

Sure, sonny, your mom's addressing those invitations with just ordinary high-acid ink. And high-acid inks cause 65% of all pen troubles! Why don't you tip her off to Quink—the kind your teacher uses. It contains solv-x to protect pens.

"USE MY QUINK. IT CLEANS PENS AS IT WRITES!"

Smart boy! No wonder your school papers won all those gold stars for neatness! And Quink does much more than keep pens free-flowing. For while ordinary high-acid inks damage vital pen parts, solv-x in Parker Quink guards against metal corrosion and rubber rot.

"OH, BOY! DOESN'T THAT SOLV-X MAKE A DIFFERENCE?"

Smooth writing now, isn't it lady? And brilliant! That's why Quink is America's largest-selling ink. That's why new millions are switching to Quink. And remember, only this ink developed by Parker scientists, contains wonder-working solv-x. Yet Quink costs no more than other inks!

Copr. 1946 by The Parker Pen Company

Solv-x in Parker Quink protects pens 4 ways:

1. Ends all gumming and clogging. Gives quick starting and even flow.
2. Dissolves and flushes away sediment left by ordinary inks.
3. Cleans a pen as it writes... keeps it out of the repair shop.
4. Prevents metal corrosion and rubber rot always caused by ordinary high-acid inks.

Stop pen troubles before they start! Quink with solv-x comes in 4 permanent, 5 washable colors at 25¢. School size, 15¢. Also pints and quarts. The Parker Pen Company, Janesville, Wis., consin, and Toronto, Canada.

from a laundry truck, or it would be hidden in an empty store front or second-story window.

For three weeks this continued, scarcely anyone ever recognizing Milland. But there was one exception: one day Milland was recognized by a passing motorist who afterward telephoned to one of Milland's close friends in the Paramount organization in New York. "I just want to tell you," he said, "that I saw your friend Ray Milland dead drunk on Third Avenue. If I were you I'd try to get hold of him and straighten him out."

Meanwhile the letters are pouring in to the Milland home and studio. Some, written in the slanting, unsteady hand of the true souse, are wild pleas for help. These Milland refers to proper medical authorities. Many come from the frantic wives, children and relatives of other lifelong rum pots, seeking advice and usually diving right into the subject with such opening sentences as, "My husband has been drunk for 40 years." Still others are from Prohibitionists, a few full of praise, others frankly angry. Apparently many moviegoers cannot accept Milland merely as an excellent actor; in their eyes he must be either the champion of temperance or the human incarnation of Satan and John Barleycorn.

Indeed, worst of all to the melancholy Milland are the accusing letters: "You have given my father new ideas on ways to find liquor"; "My brother just pawned the ice-box." One woman complained that her husband had picked up a lot of tricks after seeing Milland at work hiding his bottles in odd places about the house. "Now," she wrote, "every day we have to feel the bag of the vacuum cleaner."

AT HOME with his 6-year-old son Danny, Milland reads some of his fan mail from agonized alcoholics.

Back from the UNO meeting in London, Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg last week made an important speech. The time has come, he said, to take a firm stand toward Russia. Can you have a baby without pain? "Much progress has been made toward reducing the pain of childbirth. New drugs and new techniques are being studied constantly.

Each physician knows what is best for the mother under his care. Each physician has available for use any one of several forms of anesthesia when it should be given to prevent mothers from suffering. While completely painless labor remains a promise of tomorrow, childbirth is now much easier than it once was. Mothers today have the comfort of knowing that they may have their babies without fear."

After your baby is born...

1. See your doctor regularly—He will tell you what to eat, what special preparations to take, if any, and how to adjust your routine so that you get enough rest. You'll have to be strong and well if you plan to nurse your baby or take care of him.
2. Do everything the doctor advises—Report any minor troubles, even a cold. Extra caution is necessary the first few months after childbirth until you've fully regained your strength.
3. Try not to worry—Tell the doctor if anything is bothering you, no matter how trivial. You can count on his friendly understanding.

LIFE'S PICTURES

LIFE Photographer Wallace Kirkland traveled 700 miles into frozen Canada for his pictures of Exercise Musk Ox (pp. 40-43), struggled with nightmarish protective clothing, used a toboggan and an airplane to get his shots. He felt he had reached a high point of his career when he donned a face mask (see left) to protect him against the subarctic cold, was let down hard when he had to take it off because its too-narrow eye slits made camera focusing impossible.

What is Your Child's "I.Q."?

THE TESTS that determine a child's intelligence quotient help to predict his possibilities for further mental development. The great majority of children would pass such tests with a "good mark"—a few would prove to be far above average.

Whatever your child's I.Q., however, he will be better fitted for life if he has a good education, and you can make certain that he will be able to complete the schooling he deserves—even if you should die—by providing some extra Prudential life insurance for this purpose. You can also accumulate funds to pay for his college education, through a special Prudential juvenile policy which matures when a child is eighteen.

Your Prudential representative will be glad to explain such Prudential policies to you, and to show you the advantages of providing for your child's education in this way. When you talk with him, take the opportunity to ask him whether your life insurance program, as a whole, is planned to give you the best possible value for your money. His training and experience qualify him to give you sound advice.

THE FUTURE BELONGS TO THOSE WHO PREPARE FOR IT

AS PUBLIC CONSISTORY BEGINS, PUIS XII, ENTHRONED IN ST. PETER'S, HEARS PLEAS TO CANONIZE NEW SAINTS, INCLUDING MOTHER CABRINI OF CHICAGO

THE POPE CREATES NEW CARDINALS

In a glory of ecclesiastical pageantry that mingled medieval tradition with modern, the Church of Rome last week wrote a new, significant page in its history by elevating 32 new members to the Sacred College of Cardinals. From the moment on Feb. 18 when Pope Pius XII read to old cardinals in secret consistory the names of the 32 new members until the ceremonies were climaxed four days later with the public consistory in St. Peter's, nothing lacked to show the world that the Church was strengthening itself for the postwar world. The public consistory—from the pleas for canonization of new saints (above) through the symbolic induction of the new cardinals—was conducted with the pomp with which the Church always surrounds its historic occasions.

The Pope, by appointing more new cardinals from the Western Hemisphere, Australia, China, underscored "the supranational character" of the Church. Four of the cardinals were American and, for the first time in six centuries, Italians were in the minority in the Sacred College. The consistory was an occasion as largely temporal as the Church's Eucharistic Congresses are spiritual, and the Pope did not hesitate to make political utterances. Principally he pointed at Russia and Communist ideology as the prime foe of Catholicism. In a worldwide broadcast he condemned worship of the state and—in an implied scolding of U.S. and England for having submitted to Russian demands—deplored forcible repatriation of peoples. In a later speech he said that in 1941 he had refrained from indicating any approval or encouragement of a war against Russia because his "constant preoccupation" was to stop war. The Pope expanded by 50% membership in the Congregation for the Oriental Church which has ecclesiastical powers in southeastern Europe and the Middle East, to combat Russian ascendancy there.

IN THE SPLENDOR OF ST. PETER'S the Sacred College of Cardinals, meeting in public consistory, sit at foot of Pope's throne on double rows of benches facing one another across broad central aisle. The Pope is flanked by members of his court and noble guards. Here a group of new cardinals, wearing white ermine capes over purple robes, are lined up to make obeisance at the throne. One is ascending steps, another already has completed ceremony and is returning to seat. Behind cardinals in tiers sit Vatican diplomats, prelates, relatives of cardinals and high Catholic laity. General public is massed outside reserved area while gendarmes keep central aisle clear for recessional.

ASCENDING HIS THRONE, the Pope, wearing miter, is assisted by monsignors who arrange his heavily embroidered red and gold robes. Throne is above St. Peter's tomb.

THE PAPAL EMBRACE greets the new cardinals after they have come up and made obeisance to the Pope by kissing his slipper. Here Pope embraces von Galen of Germany.

THE RED HAT, held by the attendant at far right, is bestowed when cardinals make second trip to throne. The Pope and attendants here are awaiting a cardinal's approach.

FINAL ACT is placing broad-brimmed hat on purple-robed cardinal. Same hat was used for all throughout ceremony. Later each cardinal was sent individual hat to keep.

POPE DESCENDS THRONE as public consistory, during which vast throng stood or knelt 1½ hours, nears end. His robes were so cumbersome he needed constant help.

CARRIED ALOFT on Sedia Gestatoria, Pontiff blesses people as he leaves. His bearers circle the main altar and then pass down the central aisle to chant of Sistine Choir.

Consistory CONTINUED

CEREMONY WAS GIVEN MODERN STAGING AMID RENAISSANCE GRANDEUR OF ST. PETER'S

For weeks before the consistory workmen swarmed over gigantic St. Peter's Basilica. They heightened its vast Renaissance grandeur with rich damask draperies, installed floodlights strong enough for Technicolor movies and prepared for the army of press and radio correspondents who covered the event. A triple microphone stood before the papal throne. Everywhere dazzling floodlights lit the scenes depicted here by LIFE Artist Frede Vidar. In all its 440-year history St. Peter's had never beheld such activities but, for all its modern trappings, the ceremony was in the Church's tradition of elaborate, dramatic pageantry.

HALL OF BENEDICTIONS, glimpsed through doorway, was where the Pontiff bestowed birettas, small hats, before the final ceremonies. Italian gendarmes stand guard.

ROYAL STAIRS lead from room where the Pope usually receives visiting chiefs of state. Some of the cardinals climbed these stairs on their way to the secret consistory.

TEMPORARY SCAFFOLD was erected in basilica to aid the workmen installing special wiring and lights. Cardinals in the foreground watch the unusual proceedings.

CONSISTORY BEGINS. SURROUNDED BY COURTIER, POPE (LOWER RIGHT) IS CARRIED TO THRONE WHICH WAS PLACED DIRECTLY IN FRONT OF THE MAIN ALTAR

WHILE THE POPE DRESSES in robing room behind door to left, Swiss guards and papal gendarmes remain in the hall. The Pope took elevator down to the cathedral.

FOUR AMERICANS received their formal notification of election in the Hall of 100 Days in the papal chancellery packed with friends, attendants and correspondents.

NEW CARDINALS PRAY PROSTRATE BEFORE ALTAR

After the Pope had been carried from St. Peter's amid shouts of "Viva il Papa!" all the cardinals in solemn procession marched around the cathedral's main altar to the Altar of the Chair at the basilica's far end. There the pageantry reached one of the world's high religious moments as the new princes of the church, in the great gesture of humility before God, prostrated themselves in prayer, their capes thrown over their heads, their vestments making a rich purple pattern on the scarlet carpet. As they prayed the Sistine Choir sang a triumphant Te Deum. Along the sides the old cardinals, in their ermine capes, looked on. When they arose, the cardinals embraced one another, then returned to the main altar to pray again as the floodlights went off one by one and St. Peter's settled back into its majestic twilight gloom.

"DEAR CONGRESSMAN . . ."

HERE IS SOMETHING WORTH WRITING TO HIM ABOUT: PUTTING HIS OWN HOUSE IN ORDER

When an editorial exhorts its readers to write their congressmen, it usually means the writer can't think of anything else to say. Yet here is a matter in which a volume of mail is really called for if we are to have a Congress worth writing to at all. For, after 54 weeks of study, a joint House and Senate committee has proposed a reorganization of Congress. These proposals add up to the best horse sense that Congress has spoken to itself in several decades. If adopted, as they certainly should be, and in toto, Congress can become a more effective body, well on the path to retrieved success.

Many people think of congressmen as windy old dopes enjoying free haircuts, subsidized lunches and a lot of joy rides at public expense. Actually most congressmen are harassed, overworked, underpaid, conscientious men, who, though directors of the greatest enterprise in the world, are handicapped at every turn by methods, machinery and facilities that belong to the era of red velvet and brass spittoons.

Workshops

The joint committee, whose chairman has been Senator Robert M. La Follette, a Progressive from Wisconsin, and whose vice chairman has been Representative Mike Monroney, Oklahoma Democrat, proposes as its most vital point a wholesale revamping of the present committee structure. This is wise because no less than 90% of the legislative job is done in these committee "workshops." Among them are such outmoded committees as the Senate's on Inter-oceanic Canals. It may have been vital when the Panama Canal was built, but not today. During the 78th Congress it paid more than $10,000 to clerks who assisted it in the "task" of passing on but two out of the 709 public and general bills of that session! The House has four elections committees. Not one has a contest before it at this time, yet each has a clerk on the pay roll at $2,760 a year and a janitor at $1,260.

The joint report observes, "We recognize the difficulties inherent in simplifying this old system of 81 standing committees." What it means is the difficulty in persuading Congress to give up the oddments of patronage contained in these clerkships, the free junkets hither and yon that are perquisites of membership, the prestige of being chairman of some committee, even if it's only the Committee on Inter-oceanic Canals.

It will require some public clamor to drive through the joint report's plea that committees be condensed and rationalized. For example, it is proposed to lump eight committees—Inter-oceanic Canals, Commerce, Indian Affairs, Irrigation and Reclamation, Mines and Mining, Public Buildings and Grounds, Public Lands and Surveys, Territories and Insular Affairs—into one new streamlined Committee on Interior, Natural Resources and Public Works. By such means the Senate's 33 committees would be reduced to 16 and the House's 48 to 18.

Obviously, congressmen cannot bloom overnight into experts on all the diverse matters laid before them daily. They need facts and assistance. Since 1919 Congress has had a Legislative Reference Service. The joint committee finds the present budget of $198,000 a year inadequate and urges boosting it to $750,000. Its research staff would be augmented by authorizing four experts at from $6,000 to $8,000 apiece for each of the streamlined committees. It is shocking to think that a legislative body for a country apparently destined to spend 25 to 30 billion dollars a year has been so backward in research. Congress now gets its information haphazardly and wastefully from the newspapers, from pipelines and from questioning department heads. Properly equipping the committees with experts would end the necessity for constantly creating new special investigating committees, the authors of the joint report believe.

Purse Strings

The way that Congress holds the national purse strings is hardly less alarming. The left hand spending money never knows what the right hand that is raising money is doing. There is no firm, set relationship between income and outgo. The joint committee has some good proposals here. The Revenue and Appropriations Committees would be required to report early each session just how much was coming in, and how much was projected for outgo. If the two sums did not balance, Congress would either have to reduce appropriations by a uniform percentage (except for interest, pensions and other fixed items) or increase the public debt.

Appropriations originate in the House Appropriations Committee, which has a number of subcommittees dealing with specific expenditures, a subcommittee for the Navy, for Interior, Justice, etc. These subcommittees meet in executive, which is to say secret, session. Some no doubt operate very well, others, equally without doubt, operate very poorly. The system of review by the parent committee is, to speak mildly, perfunctory. Frequently, consideration by the Appropriations Committee of a bill involving billions is given less than one hour!

Here again, the joint report's recommendation for added, qualified personnel will help the committee understand more about what it is doing and the secrecy, as the joint report agrees, must end. These hearings should be open to press and public, unless some matter of national security is under consideration. Another useful recommendation is that the functions of the General Accounting Office be expanded to give "information that will enable Congress to determine whether public funds are being carelessly, extravagantly or loosely administered and spent."

Although much has been written about the demands made upon congressmen by folks back home—everything from getting baby books off to new arrivals to sending flowers for lodge funerals—the joint committee found little that could be done to save the time of congressmen. Quite a bit of this errand running is good for democracy. It is an open channel from the people to their government.

Another recommendation that is worth at least a trial calls for establishment of Minority and Majority Policy Committees. The idea here is to clarify party lines and cause (a) the two major parties to adopt a line on a wider variety of public issues and (b) to encourage individual congressmen to follow their party line. Slavish devotion to a party line would be, of course, undesirable and is not intended. Yet it is a fact that a citizen cannot vote for a Democratic or Republican congressman these days with any assurance he will follow the announced platform of his party.

Conservative Republicans are more often to be found voting with Southern Democrats than with liberal Republicans and vice versa. Party organizations within Congress are now in poor repair. The coordination between the majority party and the White House is likewise poor. It is planned that the Majority Committee would consult with the President frequently, harmonizing and adjusting the party policy at both the White House and congressional levels.

Pay

We have saved until last the item that will probably arouse most reaction. The present pay of congressmen is $10,000. The joint report recommends $15,000. This is still low for the quality of people we want in Congress. It is especially low when it is remembered that two homes must be maintained, sundry political contributions made, dinner checks of visiting firemen picked up, and so on. President Truman and the National Planning Association advised up to $25,000 a year. That is nearer the mark.

In addition to an increase in pay, the report urges that congressmen be permitted to join the federal retirement system on the same contributory basis as other federal employees. This is a vital proposal. When it was advanced a few years ago there was a storm of thoughtless disapproval. The report circulated that a senator might after only one year's service retire for life on $400 a month. Actually, that would have applied to only one senator, a veteran who had served with distinction for 35 years, and it would have applied to him only if he had made substantial back payments. As it turned out, this senator failed of reelection and finished his days, not exactly in poverty, but unable to afford amenities for himself or his aging wife. He was George Norris. Few men have deserved more from their country.

Congressional pay and retirement arrangements are now wrong and must be corrected. It is one way to attract better people to serve in Congress. But, when you write your congressman in support of raising his pay, don't neglect to insist that this is only a part of the package of reform that Congress needs. Let more pay be the just reward for self-reorganization under the plan of the joint committee.

PICTURE OF THE WEEK: ➔

Defying a court injunction against mass picketing, 3,500 strikers at the General Electric plant in Philadelphia marched on the factory on Feb. 28. Halted briefly by a deputy sheriff reading the act against rioting, they surged forward again on to a force of policemen in patrol cars, on motorcycles and horses and afoot. Police charged, swinging clubs. Strikers ran, taking refuge in nearby homes where doors were opened by sympathetic housewives. But many strikers, like the one on the opposite page, were caught. Enraged police charged that strikers threw marbles on streets so their horses would skid and fall.

AT FORT CHURCHILL AT DAWN snowmobiles of moving force start out, passing in review before Canadian General R. O. G. Morton, commander of 10th Military District. Men of base force remained at Fort Churchill, once a secret U.S. wartime base.

EQUIPMENT LINES UP the afternoon before starting. Above are snowmobiles, Canadian vehicles powered by Cadillac V-8 engines. Each tows one U.S. and one Canadian sled. Below: in the single U.S. weasel is Lieut. Colonel J. D. Kleghorn, base commander.

EXERCISE MUSK OX

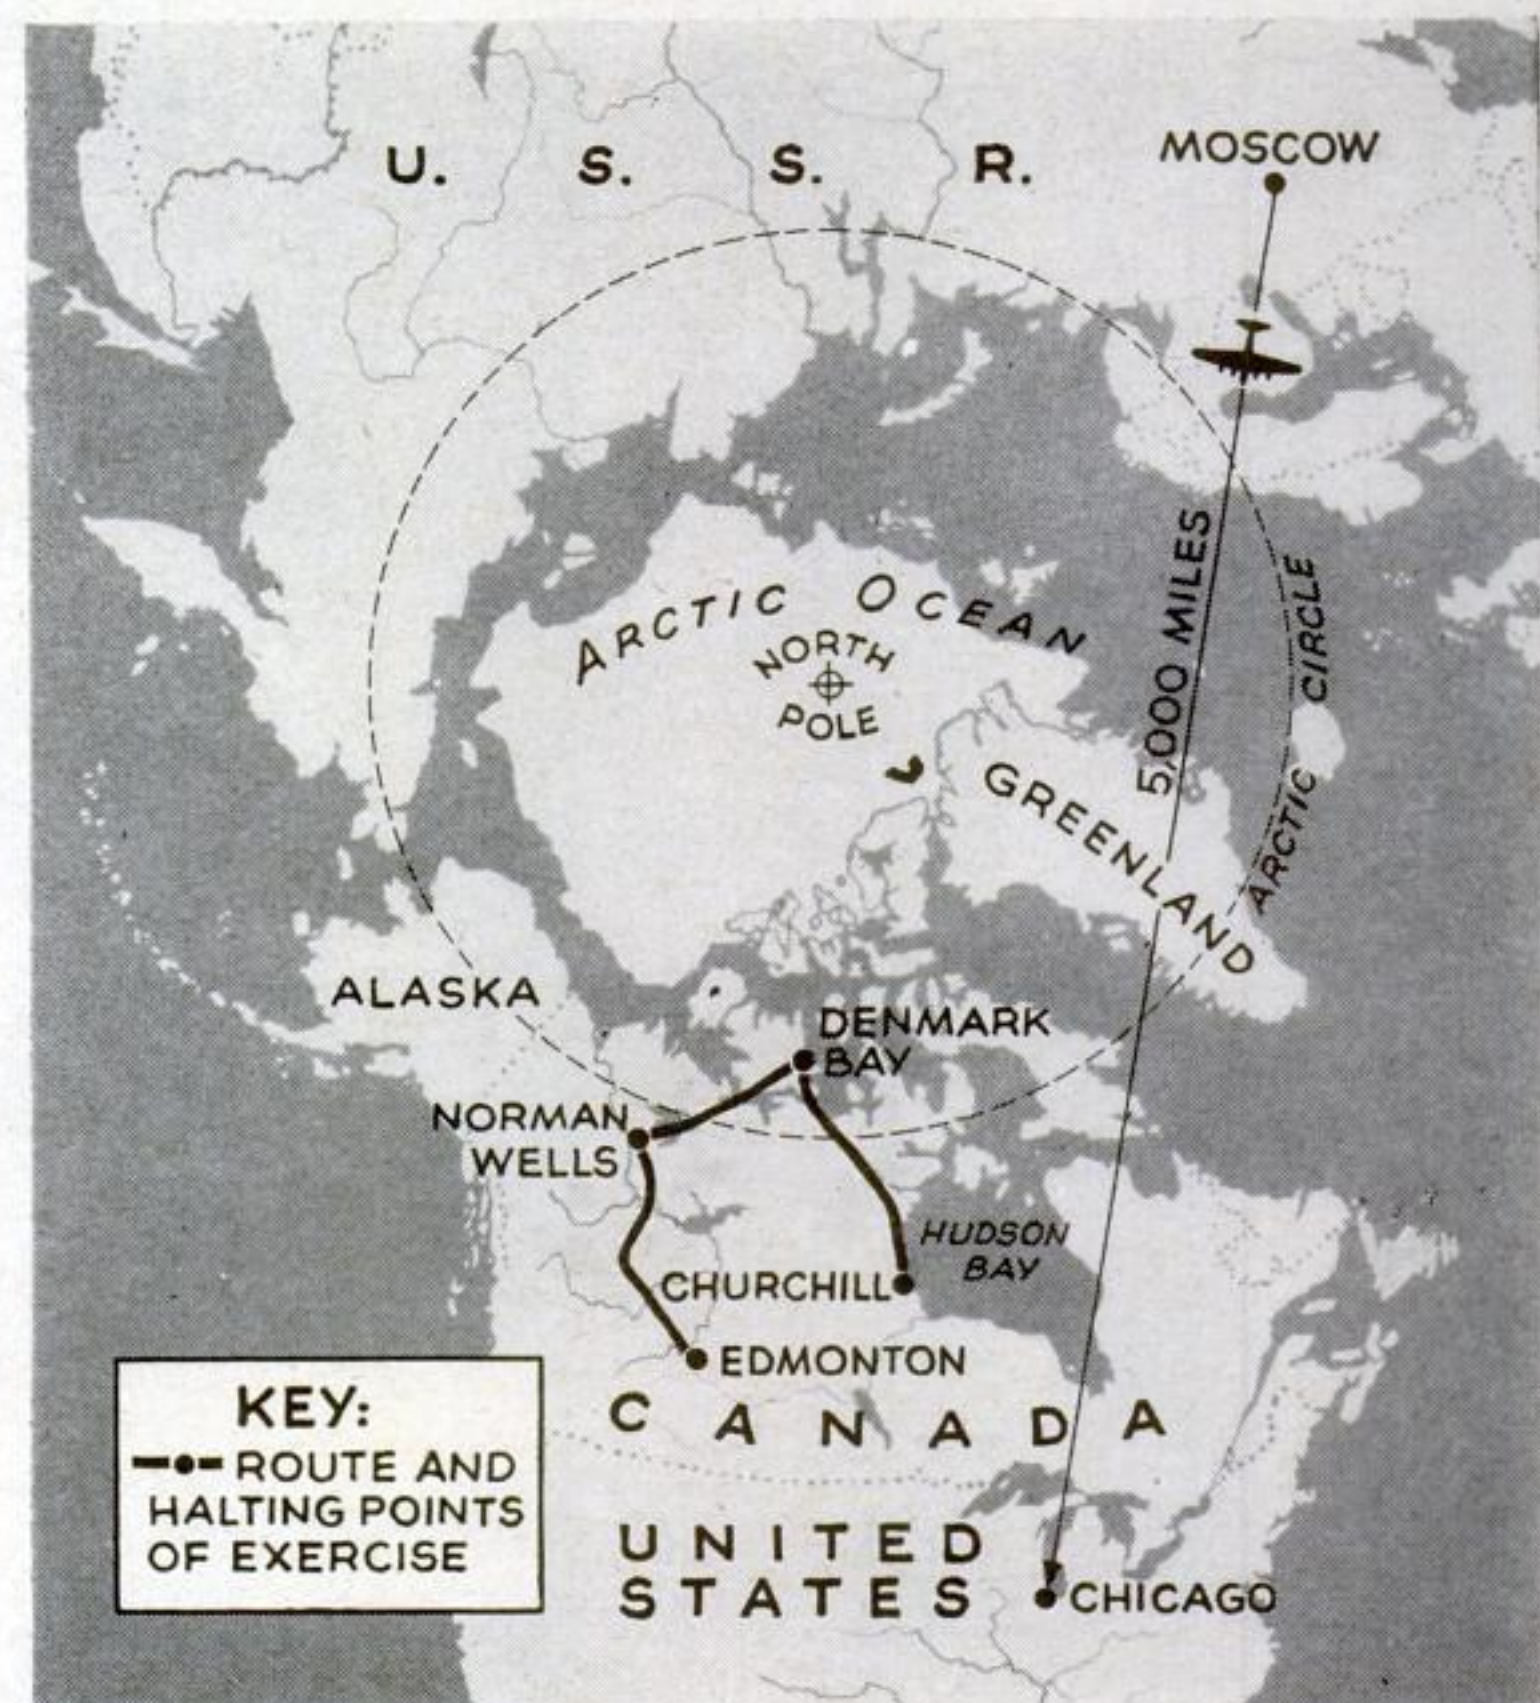

Canadian army and U.S. observers go on a 3,000-mile northern maneuver to test ways of fighting arctic Canada's Exercise Musk Ox is the first big Allied peacetime military maneuver held in North America since the war's end. It is taking place on the great snow-driven northern wastes of Canada, around Hudson Bay, a region where some people think a future war may be held. Its purpose is to try out equipment and technique for any possible arctic military operation. Interest in Exercise Musk Ox is international. Russia, France, Belgium, Chile, Norway, Peru and the U.S. sent observers, but only Americans were permitted to go along with the expedition, which is being run by the Canadian army.

The Exercise began on Feb. 15 when 11 snowmobiles, one weasel and about 50 men set out from Fort Churchill on Hudson Bay (see map below). In 82 days they were scheduled to travel 3,130 miles in a long, horseshoe-shaped route north, then west and south. The equipment used was originally designed for an invasion of Norway which never came off. Each snowmobile, originally a light tank with part of the armor removed and a glass cabin built in, carries four men including the driver. It runs on steel-studded rubber tracks like a tractor, can easily do 20 miles an hour. It steers by applying a brake to first one track, then the other.

On the expedition men wear, among other clothes, special black-cloth hoods over their heads, army battle dress, and they also have special arctic mittens with a fur back, designed so a man can wipe his nose without taking off his mitten. This is probably the first arctic expedition which does not carry pemmican. Medical tests proved that men who ate pemmican over long periods were weak and despondent. Instead Exercise Musk Ox carries Monopac rations, which are not unlike K rations, and the diet will be supplemented by fresh food and frozen doughnuts dropped by airplanes.

For camp shelter, the expedition carries nylon-lined, pyramidal tents. At night, rolls of fiber matting are put down as a floor over the snow. On this, each man places two untanned caribou skins. Then he lays an insulating pad on top of the skins and rolls his fur-lined sleeping bags out over this. The men must undress at night. Some of them wear pajamas; some underwear; some sleep nude. Worst part of expedition is crawling back into frozen clothes in morning.

THE 3,130-MILE ROUTE, Churchill to Edmonton, goes 350 miles past Arctic Circle, with ten stops. Only four snowmobiles will go to northernmost point, Denmark Bay.

SNOWMOBILES LEAVE CHURCHILL, CROSSING FROZEN CHURCHILL RIVER. DOG TEAM RACED "LIFE" PHOTOGRAPHER KIRKLAND AHEAD TO SHOOT TAKE-OFF PICTURES

GASOLINE and other supplies are dropped by parachute. A fleet of ski-equipped Norseman airplanes and four C-47s is based at Churchill for liaison with moving force.

IGLOO is built in training session. Experienced man can finish one in hour, using snow knife or saw to cut slabs. Contrary to popular beliefs, igloos are much warmer than tents.

EXPEDITION BEATS ITS WAY ACROSS THE FROZEN TUNDRA

The expedition was 43 miles out of Fort Churchill when LIFE Photographer Wallace Kirkland took this photograph from one of the Norseman planes assigned to the base. The six snowmobiles look like tiny beetles as they curl their way across the frozen tundra. The temperature is 43° to 48° below zero, which is not so cold as it sometimes gets in the region. The terrain they are covering is much like that they will find most of the way along their lonely route—flat, barren waste, covered by feet of hard-packed snow, beaten by icy winds which blow from the Arctic with nothing to slow them down.

For some stretches, on their first leg, the snowmobiles had to cross frozen Hudson Bay, whose ice rises and falls 15 feet with the tide.

Second day of the Exercise, snow blew so hard that the expedition could not break camp for a day and a half. The lone U.S. weasel broke down, had to limp back to Fort Churchill. Another snowmobile was to be flown to the expedition to replace it.

The vehicles on the expedition travel in echelons of four which keep less than a day apart. Vehicles in each echelon must keep in sight of one another. The Hudson's Bay Company stations in the Arctic keep in constant communication with Exercise Musk Ox, whose planes have radios with a beam of 70 miles and several Gibson girl lifeboat sets with a range of ten miles. The greatest communication hazard is the aurora borealis which in this region is magnificently beautiful but ruinous to radio reception.

DIAPERMEN'S CRISIS

Chorus girls save baby launderers' convention from public inattention

Last week in Chicago the Diaper Service Institute of America faced a crisis. D. S. I. A.'s members are laundry specialists whose business is supplying homes with clean diapers and hauling away dirty ones. To exchange views on how to do this better they met in convention in Chicago, a fact they deemed worthy of public notice. But Chicago is a much convened-in city and even this, the first national convention these diaper launderers have held, did not noticeably quicken the public pulse.

Editor Eli Levine of The American Baby, at the convention, got an idea. He summoned three chorus girls, dressed them in pinned-together diapers, called in news photographers. Next day the D.S.I.A. was in the papers from coast to coast. Thus acclaimed, the convention proceeded happily despite the fact that the papers reported the costumes not as diapers but as a new kind of playsuit.

Cod with Spinach au Gratin (A Birds Eye Bull's Eye)

2 packages Birds Eye Fillet of Cod
1 box Birds Eye Spinach
4 tablespoons chopped onion
2 tablespoons butter or other fat
1 cup (4 ounces) grated American cheese
1 tablespoon milk

Cut tender Birds Eye Fillets in serving pieces. Place in greased, shallow baking dish, brush with fat, and sprinkle with salt and pepper. Place under broiler 15 to 25 minutes, turning to brown both sides.

Meanwhile, cook crispy-clean, farm-fresh Birds Eye Spinach as directed on package; drain, chop, and season. Sauté onion in fat until lightly browned and mix with spinach.

Heat cheese and milk in double boiler until cheese is melted, stirring occasionally. Arrange spinach around fish in baking dish, pour cheese sauce over top, and place under broiler until cheese is lightly browned. Makes 4 servings.

HALF-BALD ROBERT LETOURNEAU (CENTER) DIRECTS HIS MEN IN LAYING DOWN THE NEWLY COMPLETED CONCRETE HOUSE AT LONGVIEW, TEXAS DEMONSTRATION

"BUNGALOW BIDDY"

R. G. LeTourneau's 165-ton gadget lays one concrete house per day

Robert Gilmour LeTourneau, the rich, pious bulldozer king (LIFE, Oct. 16, 1944), last week appeared to have one solution to the housing shortage. It was a 165-ton device officially known as a Tournalayer, informally called a "Bungalow Biddy," which lays a 24x30-foot concrete house in 24 hours. The Bungalow Biddy swings an outer mold into place over an inner mold, then backs off while workmen fill five-inch space between with concrete. When the concrete has dried a day later, the inner mold is loosened, leaving the house attached to the outer mold. Bidy, embracing house and outer mold in U-shaped arms (above), then carries them to the previously prepared site where the house is laid by the mold's rising up from it.

Biddies will be made at Longview, Texas, where last month a civic celebration of the new industry was topped off by the laying of a house (below).

FIRST STEP in laying a house is the Bidy's placing its outer mold (left) over the windowed inner mold.

AFTER 24 HOURS concrete poured between molds is hard. The house is carried in outer mold to its site.

HOUSE IS PLACED on the site and the outer mold is loosened and finally raised from it by huge Bidy.

BLACK HAWKS

Despite injuries, Chicago hockey team leads the league in scoring

For most of the present season the Chicago Black Hawks have been the hottest, fastest ice-hockey team in the U.S. or Canada. Their flashy puck handling, which is shown in these remarkable stroboscopic pictures by LIFE Photographer Frank Scherschel, put them at the top of the National Hockey League in January, when five of their players ranked among the league's seven top scorers. The speed and teamwork of their forward line—the Bentley brothers, Max and Doug, and Bill Mosienko—made the team almost unstoppable. But in midseason Mosienko tore a ligament in his left knee and was out for nine games. Before he returned to play, Doug Bentley's right knee was injured and then Max Bentley tore a ligament. The team dropped to second place. Before late March, however, the famous line will be playing together again. Then the Chicago Black Hawks, who are certain to enter the Stanley Cup play-offs, expect to win the cup and with it the world championship.

Horeck is a substitute wing man, replacing Doug Bentley who was out with knee injury. Black Hawks won, 6-2.

MOSIENKO AND MAX BENTLEY take advantage of a loose puck in a game with the Montreal Canadiens.

CLOSE-IN ACTION around the Rangers' goal is characteristic of Chicago's style of attack. They surround the goal, use short, quick passes. In this picture each Black Hawk forward is in position to score. No goal was scored, however, because Ranger Defenseman Colville (No. 6) knocked the puck (arrow) away from Chicago's Horeck.

Mosienko (left) corners puck while Bentley (No. 5) starts across ice to get in scoring position. Canadiens won, 5-1.

AFTER FACE-OFF in Canadien game, Black Hawk Donald Grosso (No. 11) turns to follow puck which has been passed to his opponents. Linesman (left) is hurrying to get out of the way. Chicago goal is to the right.

MAX BENTLEY SCORES an unassisted goal in third period of Ranger game. Bentley (No. 5) came up the ice, used Mosienko (left) as a decoy. Ranger Defenseman Bill Moe (center) was caught between the two and Bentley shot puck (arrow) past him into goal. His movement to the left and shot to right had pulled goalie out of position.

MAKE MINE MUSIC

Walt Disney's newest full-length picture, Make Mine Music, is a vaudeville show designed for those who were a little overwhelmed by his high-flown Fantasia. Its ten acts range from straight cartoon versions of old legends—the Martin-Coy hillbilly feud, Casey at the Bat—through an abstract impression of the Benny Goodman Quartet playing After You've Gone.

The picture's "stars" remain in the background only as voices (Nelson Eddy, Jerry Colonna, the Andrews Sisters), as shadows (Dancers Tania Riabouchinska and David Lichine) or as tootlers (Mr. Goodman and his men). To spectators Make Mine Music may seem either a new art form or just a collection of good Technicolor cartoons. Not all the acts quite make the grade, but those that do have all the brilliant imagination of the wonderful Walt at his best.

BENNY GOODMAN leads orchestra in music for All The Cats Join In and quartet in After You've Gone.

DINAH SHORE sings Two Silhouettes to accompany shadow dancing of Lichine and Riabouchinska.

STERLING HOLLOWAY, the possessor of Hollywood's most naive voice, narrates Peter and the Wolf.

PETER AND THE WOLF

For American children the most familiar music in Walt Disney's new production is Sergei Prokofiev's score for the old Russian fairy tale, Peter and the Wolf, which has been made into one of the most popular of today's record albums. Disney's version is narrated by Sterling Holloway, whose wistful and bewildered voice is perfectly suited to the wonders of a world where animals talk and villains always get their just deserts. Moviegoers will see three new Disney animals in Peter and the Wolf—a bird, a duck, and a cat. The duck, whose name is Sonia, is no relation to Donald. But the Wolf is an old Disney friend, bigger and badder than ever.

PETER STEALS A POPGUN from his sleeping grandfather. Although warned that the Wolf is bloodthirsty, Peter has decided to become a hero by shooting him.

THE HUNT BEGINS with Peter and friends, a bird, a duck and a cat, all tip-toeing through a wood. Cat tries to eat bird but Peter induces them to be friends.

THE WOLF ATTACKS after Peter's popgun fails to kill him. Peter and the others run for their lives and only the duck is left, fallen on his back in the snow.

THE SURVIVORS MOURN for the duck, who they now believe is dead. The Wolf reappears and the bird, attacking him, comes close to being eaten up.

THE WOLF IS CAUGHT by Peter and the cat. They try to pull him over the limb but remain dangling alongside the angry Wolf, who snaps hungrily at them.

PETER WINS OUT. With the cat's help he gets the Wolf tied up. Then the duck and some hunters show up and everybody joins in a big parade of rejoicing.

WILLIE THE WHALE, MUSICAL CETACEAN, SINGS A JOYOUS CHORUS OF "SHORTNIN' BREAD" TO HIS ENRAPPED DEEP-SEA FANS, THREE SEALS AND A PELICAN

WILLIE THE WHALE

In Make Mine Music Walt Disney adds a new figure to the famous collection of characters which began with Mickey Mouse. He is Willie the Whale, the hero of The Whale Who Wanted to Sing at the Met. Willie not only sings but is capable of singing in any voice range—tenor, baritone, soprano or contralto, sometimes all of them at once. His ambition, of course, is to leave the sea for grand opera in New York.

Word comes to the musical world of a singing whale. Tetti-Tatti, the great impresario of the Metropolitan, decides that Willie must have swallowed an opera singer. Having discovered great singers in fish markets, he hopes to find TETTI-TATTI, director of Metropolitan Opera, prepares to harpoon Willie the Whale, whom he believes has swallowed a whole bevy of great operatic singers.

WILLIE ASCENDS TO HEAVEN with a harp in his hand and a halo over his head. His ascent is accompanied by the music of a chorus of 400 Nelson Eddys.

WILLIE MAKES HIS DEBUT AT THE METROPOLITAN BY SINGING ALL THE ROLES IN "LUCIA DI LAMMERMOOR" BEFORE PACKED HOUSE OF THRILLED OPERAGOERS

another star in a whale. He goes after Willie with a harpoon. When he finds him, Willie serenades Tetti with a trio from Lucia, convincing Tetti that Willie is full of singers.

At this point the narrator says that Willie could become Tetti's great discovery and a tremendous sensation at the Met. Then Willie is shown singing there. He sings Faust, Lucia, Tristan und Isolde and I Pagliacci. The audience goes overboard with enthusiasm.

But it is only a dream, for Tetti has harpooned Willie. Very sadly the dying whale sinks to the ocean floor. Finally he goes to heaven where he is properly understood and appreciated.

Willie is remarkable for his many voices. All of them, from soprano to bass, belong to Nelson Eddy. To sing a duet with himself, Eddy would record one part, then sing the other while the first was played back. For the 400-voice Ave Maria chorus, a special device multiplied 100 times the quartet of Eddy, Eddy, Eddy and Eddy.

WILLIE SINGS MEPHISTOPHELES in opera Faust amid flames befitting the diabolic role. Audience is impressed because able Willie sings all opera parts.

WILLIE SINGS CANIO, hero's role in I Pagliacci. As the clown who has to laugh while his heart is breaking, he sings the famous tragic aria Vesti la Giubba.

Along with the classic Russian legend of Peter and the Wolf Disney has used a classic American legend in Make Mine Music. It is Ernest Lawrence Thayer's poem of baseball heroics, Casey at the Bat. Casey was first made famous by the late De Wolf Hopper, who recited it hundreds of times in vaudeville. His record of it was played in nearly every U.S. home in the early days of the talking machine.

In Disney's film the poem is recited with gusto by Jerry Colonna. The heroic story unfolds on the screen exactly as Thayer planned it and the Disney drawings do nothing to destroy the Homeric tragedy of Casey's downfall.

"THE OUTLOOK WASN'T BRILLIANT for the Mudville nine that day." With Mudville behind, 4-2, in eighth inning, manager gives a pep talk to his team.

"CASEY, MIGHTY CASEY" advances to bat. With two out, two men got on base and the crowd is sure that Slugger Casey will hit a home run and win the game.

"THE WRITHING PITCHER" trembles as "defiance gleamed in Casey's eye, a sneer curled Casey's lip." The pitcher has lost all hope of ever winning the game.

STRIKE ONE comes as show-off Casey ignores the first pitch. The Mudville rooters are ready to kill the umpire but Casey silences them, bids the game continue.

STRIKE TWO comes as Casey, scornfully immersed in literature, remarks that the pitch "ain't my style." Then the crowd watches him get down to business.

STRIKE THREE. "The air is shattered by the force of Casey's blow. . . . The sun is shining. . . . But there is no joy in Mudville—mighty Casey has struck out."

Hormel: The Spam Man

An inventive meat packer who says that GIs slander his product is full of ideas like Spic, Arf and an annual wage for workers

by FRANCES LEVISON

Now I lay me down to sleep

And pray the Lord the Spam don't keep.

This fervent prayer was penned by a weary GI overseas. Along with other odes, jokes, art work, praise and downright vilification, it represents a body of literature centering on one of the most celebrated nouns of World War II and voices the consolidated attitude of American servicemen who ate meat from tin cans.

The British Isles came to be Spamland. Uncle Sam turned into Uncle Spam. LCTs invading Europe were collectively the Spam Fleet. The ETO ribbon became the Spam Medal. USO troupes toured the Spam Circuit. Spamvilles sprouted on South Sea islands. Comedians quipped, "Spam is a ham that didn't pass its physical." "Spam is a meatball without basic training."

Europeans were more courteous. The Russians facetiously called Spam "the second front," and, later, appreciatively, "Roosevelt Sausage." Britishers swankily served Escalope of Spam in fine restaurants. The London Daily Mail, crying a halt to the vituperation, ran a first-page headline proclaiming, "Spam Has Suffered Enough." Many grateful civilians credited Spam with a large share in winning the war.

Long before V-E Day, however, it had been authoritatively established that the mottled pink meat of which GIs complained was not Spam at all. A lively correspondence between Yank and George A. Hormel & Co., makers of Spam, revealed that the victual in question was made by a number of manufacturers according to recipes prepared by the U.S. Army Quartermaster Corps and then packed in bulk tins. Spam, the Hormel company insisted, was a special high-grade compound of ham and pork shoulder and came only in 12-ounce packages. Quantities of real Spam were shipped to England and Russia, via Lend-Lease, but little to the Army. Spam makers carefully pointed out the vital distinction that dainty, tasty Spam retained liquids in the meat, whereas the bulky Army preparation was guilty of the worst sin in the tinned-meat world—the presence of "loose juice." But Spam had grown into legend, and to fed-up GIs the truth was a quibble. Yank ended the discussion with the dry couplet:

*What's in a name? That which we call Spam
By any other name would taste as lousy.*

There is, as a matter of fact, some justification for the extension of the trade name Spam into a common noun for all luncheon meats. Spam was the predecessor by several years of that bevy of monosyllabic tinned-meat concoctions, Treet, Prem, Snack, Tang, Mor and more than 100 other imitators. Its current notoriety climaxes a 25-year campaign by its progenitor, Jay Catherwood Hormel (rhymes with normal), to induce society to eat meat out of tin cans.

Jay Hormel is president of what he inelegantly calls a "butcher business," founded by and named for his father, George Albert Hormel, and situated in the Northwest corn belt at Austin, Minn. Under the elder Hormel's management the company thrived as a conventional packing house whose white-aproned employees never heard of Spam or any other kind of tinned meat. Today George A. Hormel & Co. still packs and sells more fresh meat than being waged throughout most of the nation's meat-packing industry is attributable to the distinctive policies of which his annual wage plan is but one manifestation. For some years he has granted "incentive payments" to individuals in departments which exceed production schedules, and has given as much as eight weeks' extra pay a year to all his workers on a profit-sharing basis. The new contract between George A. Hormel & Co. and U.P.W.A. Local 9 contains some unusual provisions. For example, no worker can be fired without 52 weeks' written notice except in cases of personal misconduct. Any employee not pulling his weight in his department is given written notification and his performance either improves or he is moved to a more suitable spot. The Hormel company boasts the lowest turnover rate of any packing house in the nation.

When Local 9's negotiators approached Jay Hormel for a raise last fall he astonished them by remarking pleasantly, "Of course you need a raise. How else are we ever going to pay off the national debt?" Informed that 200,000 American packing-house workers were asking a 25¢-an-hour raise, Hormel promptly granted his 6,000 employees a flat $7-a-week raise for an interim period, with the added promise that he would meet any higher rate that might emerge from negotiations elsewhere.

Hormel's labor relations have not, however, always been quite so friendly. Like many men of ideas he likes his own proposals, and he was profoundly hurt in 1933 when his employees struck against compulsory insurance deductions on their pay checks and carried him out of his office in Sewell Avery style. The strikers won their point and not long afterward Hormel recognized the union. He confessed to its members later, "I found out in 1933 I couldn't lick you, so I joined you."

Ever since his conversion to unorthodoxy, Hormel has been labeled everything from pale pink to red. His competitors sometimes wonder whether Hormel operates a butcher business in order to exercise his social convictions or practices social beneficence in order to stay in the butcher business. Hormel prefers the latter view. Contentedly surveying the 170 acres of his estate outside Austin, he remarks with indisputable logic, "I'm well situated. I don't want to get removed." His associates credit him with predilections which are anything but unworldly. "He has all the aptitudes and inclinations for high living," a friend remarked recently. "I can't understand what keeps him from being a playboy." Hormel's usual response to queries concerning his business assiduity is, "A man's got to eat." He insists that he is no more than earning his own large salary check when he sees to it that others are profiting from canned. But to U.S. housewives the name Hormel is most familiar on the label of a can on the grocery-store shelf.

Both the Hormel company and its president are odd phenomena on the U.S. economic scene. An only son who inherited a lucrative business from a self-made father, Jay Hormel is an original thinker who has put his novel economic ideas into practice. The best-known of these is the Hormel company's guaranteed annual wage, designed to cushion employees against seasonal fluctuations in the meat industry. Under this system an employee's weekly base rate remains constant whether he works 53 hours in wintertime when the hog kill is at its peak or a mere 18 hours in summer when animals fatten on the farms and slaughtering is at a virtual standstill. Although the annual wage plan swells Hormel's payroll, he has discovered that increased output more than covers the cost. Significantly Local No. 9 of the C.I.O.'s United Packinghouse Workers, the Hormel local, is one of a handful of packing-house units which have stayed on the job in the current meat crisis.

Hormel's notable immunity from the labor-management warfare which last week was still his operations. "The community must eventually hold me responsible. I couldn't live out in that cottage [the Hormel estate] unless people figured they were getting some good out of me."

As one born to wealth, Jay Hormel admits a special admiration for men who started with nothing and built fortunes. He expresses a particular veneration for his father, George Albert, now 85 years old. The elder Hormel quit school when he was 13 years old and became boy of all work in a meat market. After holding a variety of jobs all over the Midwest he decided, at the age of 27, to establish a pork-packing house in the corn belt town of Austin, Minnesota's "Queen City of the Southern Tier." From the beginning Hormel Sr. determined to establish his business on a reputation of quality. "I don't think I ever flew off the handle at an honest mistake in judgment," he said recently, "but a meat scrap on the floor was something else again."

As his packing house grew, George A. gathered his mother and father and nine siblings to Austin. Soon the great Hormel clan dominated local affairs. One brother became minister of the Austin Presbyterian Church. The other three went into the Hormel company. George's wife was organist in her brother-in-law's church. George himself was the acknowledged patriarch of his tribe and community. A large man and well coordinated, he skated, captained the local ball team and excelled at "horse shinny" (Minnesota prairie polo). Last year, aged 84, he shot an 84 on the Beverly Hills Golf Course.

Young Jay Hormel, George's only child, grew up in the shadow of his father's talents. Strong-willed as his father but smaller, not particularly athletic, somewhat erratic, he was a little overwhelmed by the record he saw before him. His father sent him to Princeton for three years and then, deciding his tuition fees were a poor investment, brought him back to the packing house.

In 1917 Jay went off to war. Out of the shadow of his family he enjoyed himself and demonstrated for the first time his administrative talents. He was stationed at an ice plant in the quartermaster depot at Tours. One of its functions was to distribute beef that came from the U.S. frozen in quarters. Early in 1918 shipping space grew scant and supplies were running low. Hormel and his commanding officer, a Colonel Grove, figured that 40% cargo space could be saved if the beef were boned before it was frozen, and he dispatched a cable explaining this to Washington. The idea was accepted, and Lieutenant Hormel was sent to the U.S. to compose uniform orders for American packers on how to bone, freeze and pack beef.

After the war Hormel returned home with a lot more confidence and a little more prestige. He remained the boss's son, however, until one fateful Saturday night in 1921 when he made the simple announcement to his father, "Dad, I think we're broke." He was right. During the war the Hormel company had drifted into a long vacation and the old-time executives had worn their jobs into comfortable ruts. Under these circumstances an enterprising assistant comptroller, "Cy" Thomson, had found it simple to embezzle systematically over a period of years the sum of $1,187,000. No one, neither Hormel officials nor accountants, had discovered anything amiss. It was not until Jay Hormel, coming on a slight oddity in the records, undertook a careful study of the books that Thomson's defalcation was uncovered. The blow was great because the sum embezzled vastly exceeded the company's cash supply. Over and above the theft, the stagnant company had sustained a half-million-dollar deficit for the year. Hormel accompanied his father as that indomitable man of 61 made a weary trip to his bankers and offered as collateral his personal integrity and the soundness of his organization.

"There's something I want to ask you, Colonel. Would the Army like to know how to make Spam interesting?"

The loan was granted. George A. went home to Austin, sadly but ruthlessly cleaned house by firing most of his executives and turned a good portion of the work over to his son. Jay gradually converted his father's old-style packing house into a modern firm of food specialists. By 1926 the Hormel company was ready to market tinned meats. Jay announced to his father one day, "I've just signed contracts for $500,000 worth of advertising." His startled father gasped, "You did what?" George A. had operated on the theory that if you topped your competitors in quality, you required a minimum of promotion. His advertising budget had increased little since the early days when his wife knocked off price lists on a hectograph. He could only mutter, "A half million dollars. . . . I can't imagine spending my father's money in any such fashion."

"I'm sure you couldn't," said Jay, "but you didn't have a rich dad like me."

Although devoted to each other, Hormel and son disagreed increasingly on how to run a packing house. In 1927 George A. pleaded ill health, took his wife to California and built a house. "I felt that if I left the business it would go to pot, but if I did not leave it, I would not last long," he explained later. Today the 85-year-old chairman of the board sits in his Beverly Hills office, studies minute weekly reports of the business and writes back specific suggestions on new equipment and hog-killing schedules. Hormel employees and executives both step lively during the old man's regular visits home. "When George A. gets here he doesn't spend any time in the offices," one of them observed not long ago. "He'll say, 'Come on, put on your white coat and let's get out to the plant.'"

The birth of Spam

Jay Hormel inaugurated his Flavor-Sealed line of canned products in 1926 with a whole tinned ham. The next year he added spiced ham (the direct antecedent of Spam) and in 1928 canned chicken. With the depression, Hormel's cherished Flavor-Sealed line began slipping badly, so he conceived the scheme of launching a brand-new product with a trick name and initiated a series of contests climaxed by a New Year's Eve party at his own home. Each of the 65 guests was greeted at the door with a contest blank. The price of each drink was a completed entry in the contest. "Along about the third or fourth drink they began showing some imagination," Hormel recalls. Many of the names later adopted by competitors were offered and rejected. Finally the butler delivered to the host a slip of paper marked with the word SPAM.

In 1937 Spam went on public sale, ballyhooed by one of the earthiest, corniest and most successful promotion campaigns in U.S. advertising history. Radios blared what was probably the first singing commercial, a jingle set to the tune of Bring Back My Bonnie to Me:

SPAM, SPAM, SPAM, SPAM,
Hormel's new miracle meat in the can,
Tastes fine, saves time.

If you want something grand ask for SPAM.

Sound-effect experts produced noises such as "SPAM-RIP-POP-BOOM!" Announcers talked of "that new dance the can-can full of Spam-Spam." When Burns and Allen went on the show, Gracie introduced herself by proclaiming, "This is Gracie Allen, Spam's meat-heart, speaking." On one program the announcer was knocked over the head and as he fell he bleated, "Cold or hot, Spam hits the spot." And in the course of a color-comic advertising series the language was enriched by the addition of such words and phrases as Spamwich, Spambled Eggs, "Spam good idea."

Hormel will not disclose exactly how many tons of Spam these tactics coaxed into the public esophagus. But one evidence of his impact on American gustatory habits is that 70% of the urban U.S. was using canned meats in 1940 as against 18% in 1937. And more than twice as much Spam was sold as the analogous products of its closest competitors. George A. Hormel & Co. last year had net sales of $115,000,000, a sizable figure, though small compared to the billion-dollar business of Armour or Swift. It marketed 550,000,000 pounds of pork, lamb, beef and canned meats, and it is now about to launch a number of new products on the market. Yet in Hormel's opinion, "We're now in what you might call the middle period of our business. Ever since the 1933 bank holiday we've just gone along in a rut."

Shortly after the reorganization of the Hormel company in 1922, Jay made a special trip to Europe and returned with a bride, an auburn-haired miller's daughter of La Vernelle, France named Germaine "Jerry" Dubois, whom he had met during his Army stint four years earlier. Home again, he built for her the first of seven installments of a rambling, white-brick, red-roofed house that was to become the talk of the prairie. Jerry Hormel, whom Jay affectionately and disconcertingly introduces to strangers as "my first wife," set the furnishings in gay French Provincial style. She overlaid the labyrinth of appended rooms, disappearing walls and secret staircases with a confusion of flowered wallpapers, plaid curtains, pastel linens, heterogeneous pianos and canopied beds. Notwithstanding a full staff of bilingual servants, Jerry Hormel still likes to exercise her considerable culinary skill by preparing elaborate beef ragouts and pheasant stews for her husband and guests. Hormel's canned Tomato Bretonne is a sample of the Jerry Hormel technique.

The peripatetic Spam man

Their children, 17-year-old Geordie, 15-year-old Tommy and 13-year-old Jimmy, range the Hormel acres and alternate between the swimming pool and the backyard paddock. During the war Mrs. Hormel ran an international establishment. "My wife collects refugees," her husband explains. "At one time there were 22 ration books in our house, all with different accents." This assorted ménage gave Jay Hormel, who avowedly aspires to be an orchestra leader, an opportunity to conduct not only his usual family trio of Geordie at the piano, Tommy on the clarinet and Jimmy at the drums but a full-scale symphonic aggregation, with various house guests filling in on the xylophone, tambourine, sweet potato and saxophone.

The Austin townspeople are, not unnaturally, interested in the extracurricular activities of their leading citizen. For one thing, Hormel always seems to be traveling somewhere. Many of his journeys involve active service on price or employment committees, appearances before Congress and attendance at conferences called to formulate improved business techniques. When Hormel pays social visits he turns his friends into sounding boards for his multifarious schemes. Some years ago, for example, he dreamed up a plan for a tax on savings in lieu of a tax on profits. "The consensus of the people I tried that one on was 'Nuts,'" he recalls.

Many of Hormel's ideas have born fruit; quite as many have fallen painfully flat. He no longer cares to boast that it was in the Hormel living room that a group of his friends hatched the America First Committee. Nor does he recall with pride a little ditty called This Ain't Our War which he sponsored in 1939 with unavailing energy. While Hormel never did get around to endorsing U.S. participation in World War II, like Robert Hutchins and others, he ultimately acquired a distaste for the America First Committee and for isolationists in general. "Isolationists just don't know the facts of life. Neither," he adds hastily, "do One Worlders. I don't believe any group of men can get together and run the world." Hormel's internationalism tends to embrace practical projects within his own sphere, such as maintenance of the multilingual ménage in his own home and an energetic but abortive attempt to interest the Republican Party in a scheme to export to hungry Europe the little pigs that were being plowed under at home.

Hormel's managerial imagination often leads him to brood upon the organizations of competitors and adversaries and sometimes even to offer concrete ideas for their improvement. Currently he is dissatisfied with the conduct of labor unions in America and, operating on the assumption that other businessmen share his own openness to suggestion, complains, "Why don't the unions stop talking about 'hourly wages' and fight for an over-all share of total available income? They should get management to agree in advance on the proportion of production which should accrue to labor." On the other hand, Hormel feels that U.S. businessmen, instead of grumbling about administrative restrictions, should assume responsibility for postwar expansion, devise extra goods and services and plan for productivity that will be steady and progressive.

By the nature of the case, fellow businessmen, particularly meat packers, acknowledge something less than unbounded devotion for Jay Hormel. They weary of hearing union negotiators recount to them the bounties bestowed in Austin, Minn. Only Hormel's lack of affectation, easy good humor and placid acceptance of the opinions of others have preserved his friendly status in the business world. One morning recently, after reading a violent explosion by General Motors' Charles Wilson on the irrelevance of profits to wages, Hormel commented mildly, "That's where Mr. Wilson and I differ. He's older than I am, so he must be right."

At heart, Jay Hormel regards himself simply as a meat packer. No flair for extraneous schemes blankets his fundamental love of his business. The mobile tables in the hog-cutting rooms, which have eliminated the aching labor of lifting and shoving heavy meat sides and thereby increased the capacity of the operation by one third with a one-third cut in labor, are evidence of Hormel method. And at the Hormel Institute, a research laboratory affiliated with the University of Minnesota but situated on Hormel's estate, agrarian scientists study soil conditions, feed growth and animal health, and periodically impart their findings to the meat industry and farmers in a free pamphlet, The Hormel Farmer.

Hormel's current concern is to re-employ some 1,200 returning servicemen and at the same time keep his present staff of 6,000 busy. To this end he and his "gang" have evolved more than 100 postwar employment projects. His rule of thumb for any suggestion is, "If it isn't profitable we wouldn't think of it. And it's got to be useful as well as profitable." Despite the threats of veterans to boycott Spam, one of Hormel's immediate projects entails selling that commodity to new people in new places. He also is preparing to offer the nation a number of new products, two of which display the Hormel genius for monosyllabic nomenclature. One of these is Spic, a shortening, the inevitable companion piece to Spam. The other is a dried dog food called Arf. This will be heralded to the hungry canine world in accordance with the highest standards of Hormel schmaltz. The prospectus runs as follows:

"Watch ARF!" say we of the Hormel company.

To which our new customers reply, 'ARF! ARF! ARF!'

EXPERIMENTAL PIGS, bred by Hormel Institute, are admired by Mr. Hormel. Institute is on his estate and he takes firsthand interest in its work.

It's no trouble at all to fix a formula or a glass of safe, nourishing milk while taking a trip—if Carnation travels with you.

Just the safety is wonderful! Carnation Milk is sealed air-tight in the can, then sterilized, to guard its goodness perfectly. Its extra and abundant amount of vitamin D—the "sunshine" vitamin—gives essential protection during the days away from the sun. And you always know that the Carnation Milk you buy in any far-away place is the same good Carnation Milk you get at your own grocer's.

No wonder mothers feel at home—traveling with Carnation!

BABY'S FORMULA

Your doctor will give you directions for your baby's formula. It can easily be prepared with safe, nourishing, vitamin-D-fortified Carnation Milk, which is so easy to digest because it forms a finer, softer curd. Remember that adding an equal amount of boiled water gives you whole-milk richness. Millions of fine husky youngsters owe their splendid start to Carnation.

FORMULA FOR WEE TRAVELERS

Take a vacuum bottle of baby's boiled water and carbohydrate (sugar) mixture; a can of Carnation Milk; a supply of capped, sterilized nursing bottles, a jar of sterilized nipples; a clean can opener. Measure the required amounts of Carnation Milk and the water-sugar mixture right into the individual bottle as needed. Cap with nipple and glass cap and have the porter warm the bottle before feeding.

Carnation Milk, mixed half and half with cold water, makes a delicious drink of good whole milk for the older children.

Stunts grow wilder and wilder in audience-participation shows

"In the old days," said Fred Allen recently about radio studio audiences, "we had to drag them in. Now they fight to get into the act." Today people submit to embarrassment, ridicule and indignity to take part in radio programs. They ride on ice cakes, fight with pillows, do strip teases, make cross-country trips, go into lions' cages.

The audience-participation show began humbly as a question-and-answer program on which participants were rewarded with small gifts of cash or samples of sponsors' products. Today people are required to make holy shows of themselves and win munificent prizes—hundreds of dollars in cash, automobiles, furniture, diamond rings, truck horses, free honeymoons. Some of the recent stunts they have done are shown on these pages. The end seems nowhere in sight. Ominously, even television has taken up the idea (see p. 78).

STUNTS ARE TESTED ON PROP GIRL

Although it may not seem so, men who run audience-participation shows sometimes think they go too far. On CBS County Fair (Saturday, 1:30 p. m. EST) they test their stunts before using them. A prop girl named Lanie Harper does the tricks and suffers the indignities the show dreams up. If Lanie can do the stunts without trouble, they are put in the show. Here are some things she goes through for $72.50 a week.

BALLOON-BREAKING STUNT required Lanie to hang in swing, squeeze balloons. She broke eight balloons in three swings so the act was used on air.

IN OBSTACLE RACE lissome Lanie had to carry ice cake through a barrel. This proved feasible and was used but the sponsor paid for clothing damage.

IN SPAGHETTI TRICK 17 pounds of overcooked goo had to be scooped from one pail to another. Lanie did well. Contestants dropped most on floor.

You'll never worry about staying sweet and dainty if you use Fresh.

Fresh, new cream deodorant, stops perspiration worries completely.

Fresh contains the most effective perspiration-stopping ingredient known to science.

Fresh stays smooth...never gritty or sticky...doesn't dry out.

CREAM PUFF EATING ON SWING was done by having prop man hold pastry with Lanie snapping at it as she swung. It was smeary but passed test.

PILLOW FIGHT on rail proved too much for Lanie. Here she is about to be knocked off her perch. Two boys did the fighting during the actual broadcast.

DOOR-CHOPPING RACE was used for women. When they succeeded in chopping through, they were squirted with soda. Lanie says she likes her work.

JULIO DE DIEGO

HE PAINTS WEIRD WAR AND PEACE

Great war paintings, like great war novels, are not always produced by eyewitnesses of war. Art critics agree that some of World War II's finest paintings have been produced by a genial, fierce-looking Spaniard named Julio de Diego (above), who spent the war painting in a New York studio. Julio de Diego hates war and paints it with fiery Spanish ardor. He also paints it with a technical precision and a subtle feeling for color that might be envied by many of his contemporaries.

Julio de Diego's pictorial war is not realistic. A product of his own feverish imagination, they establish de Diego as a leader in U. S. art in a trend away from factual scene paintings. De Diego's scenes suggest those of some weird, macabre ballet in which machinelike humans and human-looking machines fight relentlessly in front of fantastic architectural props and backdrops. His soldiers and statesmen are as impersonal as purposeful insects, their human qualities obliterated in a hopeless atmosphere of regimentation and mechanization. An incredibly rapid worker, de Diego turned out 45 paintings on war in the short space of three months, followed them with 40 cynical pictures about peace. Selections from these paintings are now on exhibit at New York's Nierendorf Gallery.

Julio de Diego, now an American citizen, has lived in the U. S. since 1924. The technical mastery which characterizes his work is the product of a long career during which he has done practically everything a painter can do from sign painting to fashion design. Born in Madrid in 1900, he ran away from home at 15, became an apprentice in a scene-painting studio for Madrid theaters, was an extra in the Ballet Russe's performance of Petrouchka with the great Nijinsky. For two years he was with the Spanish army, fought six months in the North African Riff wars. In 1926 he arrived in Chicago where he designed magazine covers, did fashion illustrations, got a commission to decorate two chapels in St. Gregory's Church. He also designed a laundry bag for the Hotel Sherman that led to a 33% increase in outgoing wash.

In his New York studio de Diego spends his spare time cooking aromatic Spanish dishes and reading works of Spanish mystical philosophers and poets. He smokes cigarets incessantly and dresses flamboyantly, affecting cerise mufflers and jangling bracelets. Like other good Spanish painters he is a fanatical foe of General Franco.

BESIEGED CITY under attack by army shows camouflaged red and white soldiers with huge eyes which, de Diego says, are the only feature which cannot be disguised.

THE PORTENTOUS CITY with a victory parade marching under an arch of triumph was inspired by New York where ornate rococo vies with modern architecture.

BLUEPRINT OF THE FUTURE is de Diego's abstract interpretation of diplomats and statesmen working on elaborate blueprints to rebuild a war-ravaged world.

Hands in gold-braided sleeves symbolize council of statesmen. The green monsters behind them are sinister forces which are selfishly influencing the peacemakers.

ELEMENTS OF RECONSTRUCTION (above) shows classic architecture, symbolizing Europe, being rebuilt by powerful, almost-human machinery.

UNEXPECTED ENCOUNTER (below) was painted as a relief from war scenes by artist, who feels war among animals is less evil than among men.

Naked at Bergdorf's

A SHOPPER'S DREAM TAKES PLACE IN NEW YORK STORE

In a play by Dodie Smith which ran some years ago in London and New York, two women discuss an unsuccessful shopping tour. "I'd like to be naked with a checkbook," says one. "Wouldn't it be marvelous to start absolutely fresh?" says the other.

Between them these ladies summed up every shopper's dream—of starting from scratch on a shopping binge with unlimited funds and nothing to "match." To many New Yorkers the place to have this dream is Bergdorf Goodman's, an elegant place with carpeted floors, crystal chandeliers and refined but not supercilious salesgirls. In it one can buy all the beautifully useful and silly things women like. It has $45 panties, $75 shoes, $50,000 sables and swansdown powder puffs for 25¢.

To this white-marble emporium on Fifth Avenue, LIFE sent Stasia Linder, a model, and Photographer Roger Coster. Stasia started out practically naked at Bergdorf's, wandered through the store at night (see above), picking anything she wanted. Like Cinderella, she had to give up all her finery but not until her shopping reverie had been recorded in the pictures shown on following pages.

FUR SALON is first scene of Stasia's dreamy visit. She fondled dozens of coats, from sheared lambskin at $295 to sables at $50,000. She eyed a $14,000 silverblu (on dummy at right) but finally put on a $6,000 wild mink.

IN SHOE SALON she finds a great variety of Delman high-heeled evening slippers, some of gold and silver kid, some jeweled. She spread them out, looked happily at all of them. Gold-kid slipper in her hands costs $28.

AT STOCKING COUNTER she sees some nylons. This, however, could happen only in a dream

Italian harvesters "spank" the prized juniper bush of the Apennines with sticks, to shake its ripe, purple berries onto sheets laid carefully on the ground beneath. These—and all the rare botanicals used in Hiram Walker's Gin—are imported only in the best crop years.

Why we use imported botanicals exclusively in making our gin

Albert Hall (right), New York architect, gets a "Welcome home" drink from his neighbor, Henry Getty. Mr. Hall, who has returned from 3 years' service with Army Intelligence, also gets three tips on how to make a perfect Martini: (1) make it dry; (2) make it ice cold; (3) and always make it with Hiram Walker's Gin.

FINER, COSTLIER botanicals make Hiram Walker's a finer gin—that's the A-B-C of it.

So these choice herbs, roots and berries are imported by Hiram Walker from the many lands where each grows best... subtle coriander from Czechoslovakia, tangy Valencia peel from Spain, zesty cassia bark from China, to mention only a few.

And—what's more—Hiram Walker gladly pays a premium price to import all these botanicals only during their best, their "vintage" years.

But the best way for you to discover why we use imported botanicals is to make your next Martini with Hiram Walker's Gin—and taste the delicious difference!

THE ATOMIC BOMB, shown bursting in a blue-white flash at the Japanese-estimated height of 1,800 feet, sends out four destructive waves. First to arrive at the ground, traveling at the speed of light, are radiations like heat and gamma rays.

Second is a shower of atomic particles, comparatively few of which reach the ground from this height. Third is the shock wave, traveling at the speed of sound. Last and most damaging of all is the blast, which arrives almost instantly after the shock wave.

ATOM BOMB EFFECTS

U.S. commission analyzes blasts which hit Hiroshima and Nagasaki

The U.S. commission sent to Japan to study the effects of the atomic bomb has released some of its findings to paint the first precise picture of what happened at Hiroshima and Nagasaki. The atomic explosion battered the city with several different waves of destruction (see above). Radiant heat, first wave to reach the ground, caused clothing on people half a mile away to burst into instant flame, set trees a mile and a half away on fire. The patterns of dresses Japanese women wore were charred right into their skins.

In the following waves people's bodies were terribly squeezed, then their internal organs ruptured. Then the blast blew the broken bodies at 500 to 1,000 miles per hour through the flaming, rubble-filled air. Practically everybody within a radius of 6,500 feet was killed or seriously injured and all buildings crushed or disemboweled.

HEAT AND ULTRAVIOLET rays from an atomic explosion sear the skin of an unsheltered victim. Skin of the face is usually burned worst. Pattern of shirts and suspenders may be stenciled where they have given protection.

GAMMA RAYS and atomic particles penetrate walls of buildings, deep into the body, damage blood-cell production. This causes slow internal bleeding, wrecks body's disease defenses. The smallest wounds bleed uncontrollably.

SHOCK WAVE, transmitted through the air like sound, presses in ribs, often causing hemorrhages and bleeding from the nose and mouth. Partial vacuum which follows wave sometimes causes organs to rupture from within.

ARTA FOLWELL TO WED STEPHEN T. EARLY, JR.,
EX-INFANTRY OFFICER

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Philip Folwell of Jackson, Mississippi, have announced the engagement of their daughter Miss Arta Parvin Folwell to Mr. Stephen Tyree Early, Jr., of Washington, D. C. Miss Folwell attended Washington Seminary, Mr. Early attended Staunton Academy and the University of Maryland.

MERCY STEEL—Arta helps sort and clean surgical instruments to be shipped to Europe where they are so desperately needed. Since 1940 the Medical and Surgical Relief Committee, now a nation-wide organization, has been sending supplies throughout the free world. Volunteer workers, like Arta, help collect, sort, and clean them before they are checked by trained nurses and sent on their merciful way.

SHE'S Engaged! SHE'S Lovely! SHE USES Pond's!

IT WAS AT A PARTY in Atlanta that Arta and Stephen met, and it's easy to see why she danced right into his heart for keeps.

There's a darling natural grace about everything she does. Her hair is silk-spun, her eyes warm, friendly brown, her complexion pink-and-white and baby-soft.

"I use lots of Pond's Cold Cream on my face right along," she says. "It's just the grandest cream, and makes my skin feel really super."

Yes—she's another engaged girl with a charming soft-smooth Pond's complexion! And this is how she cares for it:

Arta smooths snowy Pond's generously all over her face and throat—and pats well to soften and release dirt and make-up. Then tissues off.

She rinses with a second creaming of silky-soft Pond's, working it 'round her face with little circles of her cream-covered fingers. Tissues off again. "I like to cream double each time—for extra cleansing, extra softening," she says.

Pond's your face twice a day—as Arta does—every morning when you get up, every night at bedtime. In-between clean-ups, too! It's no accident so many more women use Pond's than any other face cream at any price. Ask for a big luxury jar of soft-smooth Pond's Cold Cream today!

Atom Bomb Effects CONTINUED

FRAME BUILDING is smashed flat by the atomic bomb blast, which follows the shock wave with winds of 500 to 1,000 mph. Half mile from a point underneath the Nagasaki explosion, blast pressure was six tons per square foot.

REINFORCED CONCRETE BUILDING sometimes stands up under the full pressure of the blast but window frames, doors and partitions are swept away. The effects of gamma rays and blast still reach people who are inside.

STRUCTURAL STEEL BUILDING, the type most frequently erected in modern cities of the world, is stripped of its curtainlike thin masonry walls by the blast. Pressure from within causes further damage when blast has passed.

SENATORS FACE ELECTION

AN ESTIMATION OF THEIR INTELLIGENCE AND CAPACITY

This year 35 seats in the Senate will be up for election. Because the Senate is the nation's most important legislative body, where a single vote can sometimes be decisive, the successful conduct of an intelligent domestic and foreign policy in the next few years will depend to a large extent on the caliber of the men who will occupy those seats. Of the 35 men there now, two (Hart of Connecticut and Andrews of Florida) have announced their decisions not to run. Most of the remaining 33 will be candidates, at least in the primaries or party conventions, to succeed themselves. The first convention will be held March 13 in North Dakota.

To help the American people consider whether they can improve on their senators, LIFE asked a panel of top-ranking Washington correspondents of varying political beliefs for their opinions of the intelligence and capacity of these 33 senators. In addition LIFE asked reporters, business associates and friends in the home states for impressions of the senators, based not on the senators' political stands but solely on their fitness for such a responsible job. The opinion quoted at the end of each picture caption is based on their views.

CONNALLY of Texas, Democrat, of the wavy white hair, full-blown oratory and slick maneuver, was once asked to run for governor of Texas because he looked like a governor. His looks, his personality, his way of telling a story have made him famous. In Texas he is called a Democrat and that is enough. There it stands for conservatism, Protestantism, Southernism and love and loyalty for friends. As chairman of the powerful Senate Foreign Relations Committee his record on the surface looks good. Persuaded by Roosevelt into the paths of internationalism, he used his political skill to bring most of his committeemen along with him. He has worked for Dumbarton Oaks and UNO. Yet essentially Connally remains a buffoon and a blunderer who has contributed nothing of his own to U.S. foreign policy. At the San Francisco UNO Conference it was he who gave the false story of the ending of the German war to reporters. He is in the tradition of great congressional statesmen but in his case the appearance sometimes overshadows the reality. For all his shortcomings of mind and manner, he wins many hearts. Last week he returned from the London meeting of the UNO Assembly, urged "restraint and caution in speech and comment" in foreign policy. Opinion: "It is good to have him in the Senate."

SENATORS CONTINUED

LA FOLLETTE of Wisconsin, Progressive, is the famous son of a famous father, "Old Bob" La Follette, founder of the Progressive Party. "Young Bob" trained for politics as other men train for law or banking. His record in the Senate is a record of forward-looking legislation; his Civil Liberties Committee (1936-42) exposed antilabor practices of some big corporations. He is now working on reorganization of Congress (see editorial, p. 38). He is a hard, thorough worker, a political independent who will this year probably run as a Republican. An isolationist, he voted for UNO. Opinion: "One of the best parliamentary scientists."

McKELLAR of Tennessee, Democrat, the presiding officer of the Senate, came to Washington 35 years ago, a dashing Southern bachelor, raconteur of distinction and rich lawyer. Today he is 77, sick, lonely, bitter, considerably worse off financially. His later career has been based on getting excessive patronage for his friends and hating the TVA. A tremendous worker, his popularity springs partly from his assiduity in getting things done for his constituents at home. He works closely with the Crump political machine in Memphis. Opinion: "A selfish, vindictive old man, dogged in articulating his violent hates and violent passions."

BYRD of Virginia, Democrat, is a rich applegrower, newspaper publisher and once governor. He is the political boss of Virginia. His machine has given the state sound, conservative government. His strength is in the local precincts and wards; his mind is doggedly systematic and direct rather than deep or intellectual. In the Senate he is watchdog of expenditures, continually urging appropriation cuts. He is personally charming, works hard but is a bumbling debater and tends to be a prima donna. He has less influence in Congress than he is thought to have. Opinion: "An honest conservative. He is a valuable irritant. Let him stay."

HUFFMAN of Ohio, Democrat, was appointed senator by Governor Lausche last fall to fill out the term of Harold Burton, who was made a justice of the U.S. Supreme Court. Huffman is a good, well-educated, well-liked lawyer with a reputation for terrier-like tenacity in cross-examining witnesses. As a politician he is virtually an unknown and his appointment came as a surprise. He will have a tough job getting the Democratic senatorial nomination this year. If he wins it, his Republican opponent will be John W. Bricker, a powerful vote-getter. Opinion: "He seems like a pretty savvy guy though there's nothing yet on the record."

KILGORE of West Virginia, Democrat, has risen in six years from an obscure county judgeship to a leading position among Senate New Dealers. He is the author of an unemployment-compensation bill and helped write the new minimum-wage bill. A student of military history and tactics, he has done hard work on the Military Affairs Committee and the Truman (now Mead) Committee. Constituents at home think he has yet to prove himself on domestic affairs. He tends to pay too much attention to world and national affairs, too little to the small things that keep home folks happy. Opinion: "One of the able senators on the Democratic side."

AUSTIN of Vermont, Republican, has been called by Truman not "just a Republican but first of all a great American." If it had not been for his age (68), Truman probably would have appointed him to the Supreme Court. As senator he is an internationalist, a man of stature. He worked on the Dumbarton Oaks proposals from which sprang UNO, was one of the authors of the original plan for the Act of Chapultepec. He is a hard, effective worker on the Foreign Relations Committee, a good floor debater. Opinion: "An exceptionally trained constitutional lawyer, he is the most constructive of the internationally minded senators. Near the top."

BUTLER of Nebraska, Republican, farm boy who made good as a grain dealer in Omaha, came to Washington and the Senate in 1941 after a campaign in which he visited almost every town in the state. As senator he has been a straight Republican Party man, active in the farm bloc. A shaky speaker with a tendency to pull boners, he has shown no legislative initiative. In the Republican primary he will be opposed by Governor Dwight Griswold, an administrator of considerable ability. In conservative Nebraska, Butler's conservatism is a badge of popularity. The primary should be close. Opinion: "Cuts a poor figure in Congress."

LANGER of North Dakota, Republican, is a shrewd, sharp lawyer with chameleonesque variability and a left-wing, isolationist background. In 1934, while governor of North Dakota, he was convicted of levying a 5% "political contribution" against salaries of relief workers. He defied the court, declared martial law. Later his conviction was reversed. After election to Senate, his right to a seat was unsuccessfully challenged, the Elections Committee charging him with "continuous, contemptuous and shameful disregard of high concepts of public duty." He introduces more trivial bills than any other senator. Opinion: "Take him out."

VANDENBERG of Michigan (see cover), Republican from a state which produces capable Republicans, is an expert on finance and international law. A successful newspaper publisher, he is one of the few crack speakers in the Senate. He was once a believer in isolationism but World War II changed his mind. No one contributed more than he to the success of the San Francisco UNO Conference and to its nonpartisan acceptance by the U.S. He returned last week from London, made an important speech in the Senate urging a firm stand toward Russia. Opinion: "He has grown tremendously toward statesmanship."

WHEELER of Montana, Democrat, was once a crusader, helped expose Daugherty's Ohio gang in 1924. He was against both World War I and World War II. He still has a blustering temper, is still a master at debate and parliamentary maneuver, still does effective work on the Interstate Commerce Committee (railroads, radio). His present campaign: opposition to the Missouri Valley Authority. Opinion: "Valuable public servant. Highly emotional so his judgment is sometimes warped. Every Administration should have a powerful critic and every Senate a continual opponent. The Senate should not be without him."

O'MAHONEY of Wyoming, Democrat, editor, lawyer, student of economics, has grown during his 12 Washington years into a senator of importance and stature. Acute and hard-working, he is a tough man in debate because of the knowledge and preparation that he puts into his speeches. His specialties are antimonopoly legislation and development of the natural resources of the Western states. A New Dealer in theory, he nevertheless plumps for tariff protection for his home-state beef. In terms of Senate influence he stands near the top. Opinion: "One of the steadiest, best-informed men in the Senate, especially on economics."

WALSH of Massachusetts, Democrat, the most powerful politician in New England, is still the idol of the Irish, Italians and Poles. Even Republican Henry Cabot Lodge Jr., fresh out of the Army, hesitates to run against him this year. Though an isolationist, Walsh helped build the wartime Navy as head of the Senate Naval Affairs Committee. Once he was a reforming zealot and patron of the laboring man. Now the fires in him have burned low. At 73 his capacity for new work is small. If he wants to run again, however, he would be difficult to defeat. Opinion: "No good. Narrow. The Senate would be better off without him."

GUFFEY of Pennsylvania, Democrat (left above), is known as the "great coattail rider." He was first to support Roosevelt for another term; hardly had Truman become President before Guffey was urging his reelection. He is shown with state Democratic Boss David Lawrence with whom he recently patched up a feud. Maker and loser of fortunes, sometimes under charges of embezzlement (later dropped) and income-tax nonpayment, he was boss of federal patronage in Pennsylvania. He fumbles his ghost-written speeches. Opinion: "A machine politician of the lowest order who's made a big thing of New Dealism."

RADCLIFFE of Maryland, Democrat, shown with his wife and his dogs, is a political enigma to his constituents. A rich banker, lawyer, socialite, with no strong organization, no speaking ability, no national stature, he keeps on getting elected. The answer is twofold: 1) the success with which he nurtures Maryland business interests in Washington and 2) his friendship with Senator Tydings and the Tydings machine. In the Senate he helps Maryland by being on the Commerce Committee and Banking Committee. There he votes against the Administration domestically, for it on foreign policy. He is a careful, serious worker. Opinion: "Except for Maryland, he makes little impression."

McFARLAND of Arizona, Democrat, born in a one-room cabin in Oklahoma, became a modestly successful farmer, lawyer and lumberman in Arizona. Before becoming senator, his most exciting days were spent as defense lawyer for Winnie Ruth Judd, notorious trunk murderess. He proved her insane. In 1940 he surprised Washington by beating Senator Ashurst, one of Congress' dudiest men. Since then he has been inconspicuous, but a quiet, thorough worker who follows the Administration line. Opinion: "Not outstanding but not a party hack, either. He has proved to be a hard-working senator who is capable of growing."

TUNNELL of Delaware, Democrat, is a banker who is also a strong New Dealer. Sometimes this makes his banker friends angry. He also is one of the largest landowners in southern Delaware and turns over half his farming profits to his tenants. This makes neighboring landowners angry. In the Senate, too, he is a thorn in the side of conservatives. Not a man of great ability nor always fair in debate, he loves a partisan scrap with Republicans. He is a sharp, smart speaker, does well on the Mead Committee, attends committee hearings regularly. Opinion: "A man of strong convictions with no hesitancy in expressing them."

WILLIS of Indiana, Republican, shown with his wife, who is his constant companion, neither smokes, drinks, chews nor swears. Known as "rumble-bumble" because he sort of rumbles and bumbles about, he is old-fashioned by conviction, personally pleasant, has many friends, few enemies. He will have a tough fight this year to win the Republican primary because the party's young, new element is out to beat him. Most of his Washington work has been on the Agriculture and Appropriations Committees. Opinion: "A small-town newspaper editor who tries hard to think things through; but a party wheel horse. Far down the list."

YOUNG of North Dakota, Republican, is a vigorous, raw-boned farmer considerably more at home with his friends (above) than in Washington drawing rooms. He was appointed last year by North Dakota's able Governor Aandahl to take the seat of Senator Moses until a special election this June. He owns a 1,300-acre farm, works it himself, has retired its indebtedness. As a senator he has supported MVA, gone along with internationalism, proved himself sincere, a hard worker, congenial, well-liked. Last summer he left the Senate for a few months to get the harvest in on his farm. Opinion: "Still an unknown. He is feeling his way. Against Langer and Nye, he stands out like a beacon."

BILBO of Mississippi, Democrat, has been sent to jail, discredited as complainant in a bribery scandal, voted by his own colleagues in the Mississippi State Legislature "unfit to sit with honest, upright men in a respectable legislative body," and yet retains popularity among the independent farmers. The reason: he plays on their prejudices about Wall Street, Negroes, the North. His recent activity has been opposition to FEPC. He got himself a flurry of publicity by writing a woman with an Italian name in Brooklyn "My dear Dago." Said Senator Taft, "He is a disgrace to the Senate." Opinion: "Worst man in the Senate."

BRIGGS of Missouri, Democrat and Truman's replacement in the Senate, likes to broil steaks, fry oysters, make fudge smothered with nuts. A newspaper publisher and farmer, his political training came in the Missouri State Senate where he developed into an earnest, if monotonous, speaker. At home his neighbors call him "a mighty fine man." In Washington he has been a solid Administration supporter and Truman is already behind him for the Democratic primary this summer. He is undistinguished, earthy, hard-working, phlegmatic. Opinion: "Still new and trying hard, but doesn't look as if he has any tremendous ability."

CHAVEZ of New Mexico, Democrat, is another senator who likes to cook. His favorite dishes: kidney stew and New England boiled dinner. Unpretentious, good-humored but quick-tempered, he is a symbol of success to the Spanish of New Mexico, from whom he is descended. For them he pushes FEPC and from them he gets political support. He is also an expert on Puerto Rico, has pushed hard for the Good Neighbor policy. At home he is sometimes accused of overdoing patronage, particularly to friends and relatives. Opinion: "Suave, social, slick politician who makes the most of his Spanish blood. But he carries little weight."

SHIPSTEAD of Minnesota, Republican and small-town dentist, still remembers the days of the Progressive-Farmer-Labor movement when he was with Borah, "Old Bob" La Follette, Brookhart and others in the great liberal movement. The son of Norwegian immigrant farmers, he quotes pages of Ibsen, speaks Swedish, Danish, Norwegian, likes his dog (above) and the cold winters of Minnesota. Today he is old and worn out, still an isolationist. During World War I his home was painted yellow in the night. Last year he was one of two senators to vote against UNO. Opinion: "He has lost his grip. An old man who should retire."

GOSSETT of Idaho, Democrat, is a farmer with a strong back, little schooling, unusually alert mind and boundless energy. Last year he resigned as governor to accept appointment as a senator. He is a rough-and-tumble orator who won his spurs in the Idaho legislature as a conservative in a radical administration. Opinion: "He is untried in Washington. He seems competent but possibly lacking in intellectual equipment."

BREWSTER of Maine, Republican, of Bowdoin College and Harvard Law School, has had a worthy career as governor, representative and now as senator. He has fought the Maine Republican organization, Samuel Insull and Congressional lobbying. An air-minded internationalist, he has done good work on the Truman Committee and Pearl Harbor Committee. Opinion: "He should be returned to the Senate."

SMITH of New Jersey, Republican, is a lawyer, college lecturer and hard-working advocate of domestic moderation and international cooperation. At Princeton he taught a course in international affairs. He joined liberal Democrats to fight Boss Hague of Jersey City. He brings to the Senate knowledge and character well above the average. Opinion: "A well-informed, intelligent citizen who is here to vote his convictions."

CARVILLE of Nevada, Democrat, has followed traditional pattern for a Western politician: small-town lawyer, district attorney, judge, governor. Last year he resigned as governor to accept Senate appointment. Though he is essentially conservative he responds to Administration pressure because it is expected back home. Opinion: "He is feeling his way. Pleasant, works hard, but a man of only ordinary ability."

STANFILL of Kentucky, Republican, is rotund, mousy, colorless. When he was appointed to the Senate last year to fill "Happy" Chandler's seat, he was an undistinguished lawyer with a small local practice. Some Kentuckians still ask, "Who's Stanfill?" As senator he has followed the Republican line laid down by Senator Taft. Opinion: "He thinks as he is expected to think. He is virtually the unknown senator."

MITCHELL of Washington, Democrat, secretary to former Senator Wallgren, was appointed senator when Wallgren became governor, thus is virtually a stand-in for Wallgren. A studious New Dealer, he is conspicuous only by his capacity for work. He is virtually unknown to his constituents. He has introduced a controversial bill to create a Columbia Valley Authority. Opinion: "A likable guy who is respected."

KNOWLAND of California, Republican, was appointed senator by Governor Warren in payment of a political debt due Knowland's father, Oakland Tribune publisher. Only 37, young Knowland is a veteran, took a hand in efforts to amend the GI Bill of Rights, suggested a system of profit sharing to end industrial unrest. In California his reputation has been rising rapidly. Opinion: "He should be good."

MURDOCK of Utah, Democrat, proficient lawyer, former representative, is serious, conscientious, something of a plodder. He is adroit at mixing favoritism to the Utah silver bloc with a New Deal line in national and international affairs. He is a tremendous vote-getter and likes debate, entering it freely and often. Opinion: "Not a strong man. Follows the Administration line consistently without questioning it."

GERRY of Rhode Island, Democrat, is one of Senate's richest men, receiving income from New York real estate. For years his pocketbook helped to keep the Democratic Party together in Rhode Island. Now he is old, is losing support of labor, which he once had, and his own party. He fought hard against the Full Employment Bill. Opinion: "He is a skillful background organizer but completely out of step with his times."

MEAD of New York, Democrat, shown planting a politician's kiss on the chubby cheeks of his granddaughter Loretto Ann Mead, has become a legislative expert after 27 years in Washington as representative and senator. Self-educated, a railroad switchman and semipro ball player, he arrived in the House as a reforming liberal, waxed mighty as chairman of the Post Office Committee. He gave postal employees a 40-hour week and a pay raise, set up the air-mail service, placed first- and second-class postmasters under Civil Service. Since then, steadily getting himself elected, he has maintained his close support of labor, the New Deal and the Democratic Party line. But time has caught up with Jim Mead; no longer is he a leader. Now he is a follower in the cause of reform. He still studies nights at Catholic University in Washington, still is a serious and hard-working legislator, still likable, good-natured, a good talker, a genial mixer. But when he took over the Truman Committee, his current big job, all the steam went out of it. He may run for governor of New York this year against Thomas E. Dewey. Opinion: "Strictly a politician, not very smart, but a good record. A tireless and sincere worker, who in spite of his light weight has managed to make himself famous as a spokesman for the working class."

by JOHN DOS PASSOS

THERE seems to have been a little trouble here," the young aviator in a 50-mission cap opposite me whispers in a soft drawl as the train slows down. I wake up with red rays stinging through the film of sleep in my eyes. A streak of dawn oozes through a row of windows in an empty wall and washes with bloody light the cracks in upended masonry and the tilting girders and the steel rods protruding from smashed concrete, twisted like the stems of weeds in a pond. The train is moving slowly through the wreckage of some great industrial plant. Farther on, the glare out of the east pours through a crazily toppling sky sign: WEST WAGON GESELLSCHAFT.

"The Germans must take a dim view of us," says the aviator, making a clucking noise with his tongue.

We all crane our necks to look out of the grimy window of our compartment at the tumbled desolation of battered buildings that stretches as far as you can see in the tawny light under a sky closepacked with dirty clouds.

"The more I see the more I hate the krauts for having made us do it," shouts a man from the far corner.

The train crosses the Rhine slowly beside the ponderous zigzag of a blown railroad bridge. Out in the olivecolored river a piledriver on a tiny black barge is at work on an abutment for a new bridge. Whang. Whang. Whang. There's something cheerful and busy about its metallic ring in the early morning air.

GERMAN VILLAGES, UNLIKE THE CITIES, WERE RELATIVELY UNTOUCHED BY THE WAR. LITTLE BAD WEISSEE (ABOVE) REMAINS IDYLIC

Through flattened suburbs the train glides gently into the Frankfurt station.

Frankfurt resembles a city as much as a pile of bones and a smashed skull on the prairies resembles a prize Hereford steer, but white-enameled streetcars packed with people jingle purposefully as they run along the cleared asphalt streets. People in city clothes with city faces and briefcases under their arms trot busily about among the high rubbishpiles, dart into punched-out doorways under tottering walls. They behave horribly like ants when you have kicked over an anthill.

Here and there on a scrap of blackened façade a clock has survived. The clocks are all going. They all tell the right time.

A tall spare elderly Frankfurter with a closeclipped banker's mustache takes us around to see the sights. The shells of great ruined stone houses stretch all along the riverbank. There is the old mansion of the Rothschilds northeast of the 14th Century cathedral. White columns still stand in front of the seared husk of the public library under a Latin inscription to the effect that knowledge insures the freedom of the state. At every intersection there's a traffic cop in blue uniform with a long warm overcoat. The traffic cops are the happiest-looking people in Frankfurt. They are warm. They are fed. Their uniforms are clean. And they can order the other Germans around.

Our guide is taking us around to see the sights as if they were still there. "Here," he says pointing to a trace of a medieval building, faint as a picture on a burned postal card blown out of an ashcan, "is the famous Römer where the emperors of Germany were once elected. On this balcony," he points vaguely upward, "they came out to show themselves to the people and pavilions were pitched on the square and the fountain ran with wine, this side white wine and the other side red, and oxen were roasted whole and the people scrambled in a merry scrimmage for the meat."

Our feet are sore from stumbling over building blocks and our mouths full of the taste of cold ash by the time we get to the zoo.

The director meets us at the gate. He is a well-built youngish man in a buttoned-up raincoat with a rather rakish felt hat. He has a way of smiling while he talks. He fumbles a little for his English but he speaks it with a humorous turn.

"It has been very difficult," he says. "I have been interested in the pseechological scientific study of the man-apes. The grown males are very furious, you know, but in the bombings, all through the bad time they were humble and clung to each other and sobbed. The gorilla died; it was too cold. Scientific work has been difficult."

He motions us into a smelly little building. "Here," he says proudly, "is the last two chimpanzee. The male is very furious. The female is 5 years old. She should be larger but her nourishment is insufficient."

In the cage next to the woebegone primates is a furry tumble of lion cubs. He looks at them and laughs. "They look well, no? I liberated them from Leipzig in the last days of the collapse although I was very bad from bloodpoisoning by being in the hand by the man-ape bitten. I drove from Leipzig very quickly in a little car to save them from the Russians with the five cubs and a box of alligators."

Land of the Fragebogen

IT WAS a raw rainy German morning. We had been driving through woods of regularly spaced pine trees all the same size that alternated with square patches of green meadowland. Along the edges of the road trudged men and women bundled up in heavy clothes and bowed under the weight of rucksacks. Across their shoulders each one of them carried a bundle of sticks. Many of them pulled or pushed before them small carts stacked with cut logs.

"Their forests ought to be the saving of them this winter," I was saying to the Military Government officer who was driving the jeep. "If they can't get coal they'll at least have wood."

"It's hard to get the stuff into the cities. . . . Law Number Eight."

"What's that?"

"Denazification. The trouble is all the foresters turn out to be Nazis. . . . Forestry in Germany was a favorite occupation for von This and von That, bigtime Nazis every one. A lot of them were mandatory arrest cases. We are having trouble finding anybody else who knows how to get the logs out."

After a succession of smashed towns along a river the road broke through into the woods again and came out suddenly on an old stone wall built around a cluster of tall gables. On the corners were round towers with conical tops. We drove through an ancient gate into a village street of halftimbered houses, intact and as neatly picturesque as an illustration for a volume of Grimm's Fairy Tales. On a big pink stucco house a sign read MILITARY GOVERNMENT.

The office was heated by a white porcelain stove. When my friend explained what we were doing the tall captain at the desk in the center of the room got to his feet. He came from the California ranching country. He'd been 17 years a sergeant in the Regular Army and had won his commission in France.

"Gentlemen," he said, "I'm glad to see you. We are 90% denazified."

How to Bring Up a Young Daughter

Tips from a teen-ager's smart mama!

Lucy's mother has big dreams for Lucy:

She wants her 13-year-old daughter to have the fun of being pretty and popular right now. And she knows (though Lucy might say "Oh, Moth-errr!" at the thought) that this just leads up to the day Lucy will leave to start a home of her own.

In reading how Lucy's Mother steers her daughter toward a happier life—both now and later—you may run across the name SWAN Soap here and there.

If you do—well, using SWAN is one of the little tricks of know-how that make the bigger things work out better!

1. Learning to be a smart shopper. Mother lets Lucy do lots of the family shopping. So Lucy learns to compare. And know a thrifty value when she sees it. Lucy's list doesn't say "soap"—it says SWAN—4 swell soaps in 1!

2. Getting used to handling babies. Lucy learns on Baby Sis. Feeds her, bathes her, the works. Every bath's a SWAN bath—doctor's orders. For SWAN's pure and mild as fine castiles—agrees with delicate baby skin.

3. Showing Lucy short cuts on household chores. Dish-washing's a pest with slow, lazy suds; a hand-ruiner with strong soaps. But Lucy finds dish-doing a breeze with mild, quick-sudsing SWAN!

4. Blossoming into beauty. "Complexion is everything," says Lucy's Mother. And the doctors say "Soap-and-water!" for teen-agers. So it's gentle SWAN for Lucy—it takes the bow for Lucy's glowing skin!

5. Good grooming becomes second nature. A daily bath—for garden-fresh sweetness. No need to coax Lucy to take her daily Swanning. She feels like a movie queen among SWAN's snow-cloud suds!

6. Choosing her own wardrobe. Mother lets Lucy buy some of her clothes—with just a word of advice. And because pretty clothes must be clean—Lucy tubs everything in safe SWAN suds! How color-fresh SWAN keeps them!

"Swan is Four Swell Soaps in One!"

GERMAN MODE OF LIFE depends on answers to fragebogen (questionnaires) required by Military Government of all German applicants for jobs.

OCCUPATION CONTINUED

"Ninety-two percent," said the thin-faced sergeant from his desk in the corner.

"How do you do it?"

"It's the fragebogen. You don't know about the fragebogen. The fragebogen's the greatest thing in Germany."

The sergeant came out from his desk with a long questionnaire of the type developed by U.S. immigration inspectors.

"If they get past this they can hold any job they want. If they don't they can't have any position where they employ labor or exercise a skilled trade or profession. They can't do nothing but dig ditches. . . . And if they lie on their fragebogen we've 'em up in court and they don't get off easy. Every man or woman who has any position of authority has got to make out a fragebogen. If it turns out they are big Nazis it's mandatory arrest. If they are small Nazis they report to the labor gang. Everybody gets fragebogened sooner or later. Then we know what's what."

"How about doctors?"

"If they can't be replaced we are allowed to give them a temporary permit to practice. Suppose a man's a plumber. He's got to do his own work. He can't hire an assistant. . . . Well, let's see what have we got to show you here. This is mostly a farming community. The people are all tailors in their spare time. We've got a shipyard and a wine plant. We've got plans to build a new bridge. Now they have to use a ferry. There's the boy scout movement. But I was forgetting," he added promptly, "I think we've got the only woman burgomaster in Germany in one of our little towns."

The captain led us back into his living quarters and offered us some German cigars. He introduced us to the slick-haired lieutenant who was his second in command. We sat down in front of the window in deep chairs of taffy-colored leather. It was a high-ceilinged yellow room. Around the walls were photographs of some German's family, healthy-looking young men and women with knapsacks starting off on walking trips, blond men with guns standing over piles of slain deer, old men with mustaches in the uniform of the Kaiser's officers. Above them were rows and rows of the small horns of roebuck and a few stuffed heads with the spreading antlers of the large European deer. From the balcony you could see a light-green valley hemmed in by hills, planted with orderly ranks of pines and firs marching down to the banks of a dark-green river. The captain poured out the thin German wine into tall crystal goblets that had some German's monogram on them.

"It's the life of Riley," said the captain. "Look at the quarters we've got. . . . A funny thing happened. One morning the kraut that owns this place comes back from a PW camp. I hear a funny little whistle outside the front door that wakes me up. I get out and there's a kind of a lanky guy waiting. I guess he thought it was his wife coming to the door. He didn't know the family wasn't here any more. You oughta seen his face."

After lunch we crossed the ferry and drove out up a broad winding valley to a little village perched on a ridge among fir trees. This was the village that had the lady burgomaster. Tiled roofs, broad eaves, barnyards piled high with manure. A few sheep. A couple of hissing flocks of geese. She wasn't at her office. We found the lady doing her housework in a big plain room with a stove with mustard-colored tiles filling half of one wall. There were white frilled curtains in the windows, red geraniums and a big tinted photograph of a stern-looking man with handlebar mustache, who must have been her father, on the wall.

Her name was Fräulein Wolff. She was a fresh-faced young woman with glasses. Unmarried, she had been chief clerk in charge of rationing under the old burgomaster. She had never been a Nazi. No, she had never had anything to do with politics. Her eyes were spry and self-possessed behind her glasses. Her dress and apron were very clean. She had the look of having just been scrubbed with strong kitchen soap and so had everything in the room. This was her father's house. She'd always lived here.

We asked if she knew she was the first woman in her country to hold the post of burgomaster. She didn't seem impressed. "Somebody's got to be first," she said flatly.

She stood there with the dust cloth in her hand looking at us attentively through her glasses, waiting for more questions. Nobody seemed to think of any so she made an impatient little motion with the dust cloth. You could see she wanted to get back to her housework. We said goodbye and she gave us one of her doubtful smiles.

A Saturday afternoon

WE DRIVE north under a squally gray sky along the curving double ribbon of the autobahn. Again the picturebook landscape: flattened hills crowned with orderly plantations of beech and pine, castles ruined in far earlier wars than this, villages of half-timbered houses with here and there a sharp thin steeple like an exclamation point. Very few relics of this present war. Only occasionally an old gun emplacement, a tank abandoned at the edge of a patch of woods or a shapeless mass of twisted metal at the foot of an embankment that might have been a half-track or a fighter plane. After all the ruin it's a pleasure to see a string of towns that are undamaged.

FRÄULEIN WOLFF, of Eichelsbach, is first German lady burgomaster.

We've left the autobahn and are following the windings of a secondary road paved with smooth square cobbles through medieval villages out of the backgrounds of Breughel and Hieronymus Bosch. By the time we are thoroughly chilled riding through the raw autumn gale in the open jeep, we see ahead of us the fine spires and the battlements and huddled hunchbacked houses of a considerable town. We climb up through winding stone streets, come out on an open parade ground under a brownstone city wall and turn in to a court beside a gawky German barracks building of gingerbread-colored brick. Sleet blows in our faces as we haul our legs stiffly out of the car. Inside the house it is warm. There's a parlor with overstuffed furniture and a dining room beyond. This was the officers' mess of the German regiment that used to be quartered here. Along the walls there are still some big silver trays bearing the regiment's crest and insignia. There are white tablecloths. The major is sitting at the end of the center table drinking cognac and water. He greets us hospitably and pours us out a drink. Several other officers are sitting around with their tunics unbuttoned, smoking and drinking. It is Saturday afternoon.

The major calls loudly for Mama, and a Russian woman with deepset brown eyes comes in from the kitchen. "Bring 'em some lunch, Mama," roars the major. "She's our housekeeper," he explains. "Her people were White Russians but the krauts had her in a concentration camp." With a good deal of giggling two girls, one of them German with her blond hair done up in a high wave and the other French, come in to set our places for us. The French girl

$64 QUESTION BRINGS A Billion Dollar Answer

Coming out of the war—in which they were called upon to carry more than 90 per cent of the military transportation load—the railroads are being asked this question:

“What are you going to do about peacetime equipment and services?”

And here's the answer for 1946:

A billion dollars' worth of new passenger and freight cars, new locomotives, new and heavier steel rail, new operating facilities, new equipment, materials and supplies of all sorts.

This means new ideas in cars—whole new trains—providing the utmost in safety, comfort, and luxury. New motive power. Better tracks and roadbeds. New standards of dependable, all-season freight service.

For the future, the answer is to be found in a continuation of railroad research for better transportation service, carried on more actively and on a broader front than ever before.

And all of it—not just the cars and engines, but the roadbeds upon which they run and the fixed facilities they use—is paid for with railroad money—no government subsidy—no federal, state, or municipal aid—no money from the taxpayers.

Operating on this self-supporting business basis, the railroads provide America with the greater part of the transportation upon which its future prosperity depends—at a cost averaging well below that of any comparable service anywhere in the world.

has little curls around her forehead. She is very young. She throws herself around like a French maid in a play. She's very pretty but her voice is husky. The Russian woman with deepset eyes explains that it is because the Germans made her work in a sulphur plant. The fumes ruined her voice. When the girls have brought in our plates they drop down into chairs between the officers at the table. Somebody makes a pass to grab the little French girl around the waist and she punches him in the muscle of the arm with her two small fists. They laugh and scuffle. Every time the Russian woman comes in the room she is followed by a tiny goldenhaired child. "That's Mimi," explains the major, pouring himself out another drink. "Mama found her in a concentration camp. Her parents had disappeared so she adopted her. Then she adopted us." The little girl sees that we are talking about her. She toddles over to us bringing a painted tin candy box. She opens it to show us what is inside. It is full of cigaret butts. "She learned that in the concentration camp," says Mama with a motherly smile. "It is her greatest treasure."

Outside the weather is fierce. Sleet beats against the windows. We sit all afternoon at the table in the warm mess hall drinking cognac and water and talking. Every now and then somebody comes in from out-of-doors shaking the wet off his clothes and bringing a gust of cold in with him.

"We ought to have more preparation," a lieutenant is insisting.

"I went to school all right at Charlottesville," says an older man with glasses who had been a school superintendent back home, "but most of the time I've had to throw the book out of the window."

"In this game you have to work by guess and by God," breaks in a third man.

"It's surprising we do as well as we do with the conflicting directives we get and the reports—my outfit sent in 87 separate reports last month—and redeploy, taking our best men as soon as they are broken in."

"Everybody gets redeployed except Military Government officers."

"We're Saturday's children all right. . . . They've got us frozen. . . . And promotion? Nix. Nobody ever heard of a promotion in Military Government."

"And are we browned off?" They look into each others' long faces and all burst out laughing.

"And then some joker writes an article in the newspapers and calls us dregs."

"Oh my aching back."

Mama has brought in two more bottles of cognac. The major fills his glass and sends them off around the table. The towheaded young lieutenant raises his glass. "Hello, dregs," he says.

We tell the Germans

THE lieutenant representing Military Government sits at his desk in a small Hessian town. Across the room is a stout German woman at a typewriter. Between them on a chair beside the telephone sits the pretty little darkhaired girl with a glum expression on her face who's the interpreter. Across the hall is an office full of German employees who keep coming to the door to ask for instructions. Beyond is an anteroom full of the local inhabitants. People don't mind waiting because here it is warm. In every other house in town it is cold.

The lieutenant is a young man with dark hair and a high forehead. The light glints on his glasses as he leans over his work. He has taught school in South Dakota and worked in a bank in a farming community in Minnesota.

A raffaced little man in a very large black overcoat with a greasy velvet collar is ushered in, trembling visibly.

"Oh you're the man I wanted to see," says the lieutenant cheerfully. "We are authorized to open three movie theaters in three separate towns in the kreis. A kreis is like a county," he whispers for my benefit. "But none of the owners is qualified. Each theater must be placed in the hands of a trustee. I understand you only applied to run one. Well, you've been cleared. You are completely okay. At least that's the present report. You must go down to Frankfurt tomorrow to get film."

The little man doesn't seem at all elated by the prospect. He backs out of the room nodding violently and saying, "Yes sir, yes sir."

"These people, you know, are the damndest squealers," says the lieutenant apropos of nothing. "They are always turning each other in. There's a dentist in one of these little towns up the road who turned in his own brother-in-law."

The blackhaired girl looks from one to the other with the same glum pouting expression on her face and nods gloomily.

"No use waiting for this case to be decided," whispers the major who brought me in to the courtroom. "We can only give a year in this court. . . . This'll have to go up to the Intermediate Court that rides circuit. They'll give him plenty."

Old-time Germany

WE'RE DRIVING around Upper Hesse, the land of the Hessian mercenaries of the American Revolution. We visit an immense light and power plant that Allied aviation mysteriously spared in the bombings. The plant runs on brown coal taken from two mines a couple of kilometers away and supplies electricity to Frankfurt and Berlin. It's not as tidy as an American powerplant but it's running full blast. We visit an immense Heinkel plant in a group of modest-looking sheds that turned out aluminum castings for airplanes and high-precision instruments. The airplane parts stand in the lathes and presses right where they were when the Americans came into town. The girl interpreter who's going around with us tells us that she was working there that day. "Brr, it was cold in the unheated buildings," she says. "The night shift worked that night and then the Americans came and that was all."

We begin to see Hessian peasants in their traditional dress. The women wear their hair pulled off their faces and tied up in stiff little cylindrical topknots on top of their heads. They wear embroidered blouses and black knee-length dresses fluffed out by innumerable petticoats. The men wear black smocks and knee breeches over the same heavy knitted stockings the women wear. Some of them have 18th Century-looking black felt hats. They have grim nutcracker faces. They slog along beside long wooden carts drawn by oxen or bulls or cows. Their wheelplows and heavy harrows have an antiquated look. Here and there you even see a wooden plow. In every farmhouse yard, right under the front windows, you see the steaming manure piles that so intrigued Mark Twain. The long coffin-shaped tanks on wheels are hauling tankage and human manure out to the fields. Like the Chinese, the Hessians can't afford to waste a thing.

Driving through one town we pick up a girl working for Military Government who wants to go to the dentist in the next village. This is a village of Elizabethan half-timbered houses and an unusually steaming and mountainous manure pile in every front-yard. When we get to the dentist's the officer who's taking me around suggests that we go in while the girl gets fixed up.

The dentist is a little ruddy-faced man with red ears and a sharp nose. His office is well-equipped. He has a girl assistant. While he works on the patient's teeth he talks to us Americans in a suave little offhand voice. His English is good. It's all about this one being a Nazi and that one being a Nazi. When we leave, the officer says to me in a tone of disgust, "I just wanted you to take a look at this guy. He's the man who turned in his own brother-in-law."

After dinner the captain in charge of the I Detachment has to go to call on the burgomaster of the next town. The place is black as pitch. It is very cosy in the burgomaster's warm well-lighted parlor. It's the oldtime Germany American students used to write home about 40 years ago. The burgomaster is a well-set white-haired man with clearcut features, an old Social Democrat the Americans found on the shelf somewhere and dusted off. His wife is stout and smiling. They have one plain and one good-looking daughter. The Landrat is there and his wife and son. The Landrat is a middle-aged man with a keen sharp face and the look of being used to giving orders. They bring out little glasses of schnapps and a plate of tiny dry cakes.

The captain has a lot to tell them. He is a breezy young man with the affable manner of an automobile salesman. He has arranged that some motion-picture houses can open. He's arranged that the pianist from Berlin who wants to give some concerts through the kreis can give them, that is if he gave the right answers on his fragebogen. He's ready to open the public library.

Everybody is smiling and friendly. The captain is smiling all over to be able to bring these good people some good news at last. We drink a toast. In German and English we piece together a story they are trying to tell us about the books in the library. About the time of the book burnings the people of this town managed to make about 300 volumes disappear. One man walled up his library with a brick wall. All these old pre-Nazi books are ready to go back into circulation.

"Well, tell the librarian to be at my office at 11 o'clock tomorrow morning," says the captain. "We'll fix the whole thing up then." The burgomaster pours out another round of schnapps.

Next morning we are calling on the burgomaster in his office in the old town hall. The captain wants to buy a Leica. Most of the cameras in the region have already been liberated. The Landrat's son thinks he knows where one is. While we wait for him to come back we study the pictures of former burgomasters on the wall. The oldest one is an etching of a splendid old fellow in a stock with bristling hair and granite features. The next one is a photograph taken around 1880 of a benevolent-looking German official of the Bismarck period. The latest photograph is of a half-draft, half-crafty looking man with a soft sharp face.

"He was very rich. He died in 1936," explains the present incumbent, smiling at us from his desk.

There's one blank square a little darker than the rest of the wall where a picture has been taken down.

The Landrat's son comes back with a camera. While we are looking at it a sharpfaced little German woman in a tweed suit bursts into the room. She's talking fast German in a hysterical hissing voice. The gist of it is clear enough. The camera is hers. She doesn't want to sell it. It's the last thing she has that was her dead husband's. The Americans have stolen everything she had in the shop.

"I just wanted to buy it," says the captain. "I could take it, you know."

She grabs the camera and bursts out through the padded doors of the burgomaster's office as fast as she came in.

"Nazi, Nazi, Nazi, Nazi," murmurs the burgomaster softly from his desk. He sits there vacantly wagging his old white head.

As we go out the captain is asking me, "Did you notice that last burgomaster, the one on the right? He had something in his lapel that looked like a damn good imitation of a swastika. That picture will have to come down. That's our orders."

"It's the recreation that hurts"

IT WAS a night of dense dripping fog. We were sitting drinking cognac and water at the officers' club. The club occupied the ground floor of the Schloss of a wealthy German family. In the hall you were greeted by a stuffed grizzled bird on a pedestal that might have been a greater bustard. Every inch of wall space was taken up by endless rows of small horns with the date and place of decease carefully written out on the triangular piece of bone attached to each pair. Interspersed among them were old English racing prints and photographs of groups of whiskered men on horseback in the uniforms of the first World War. In a back room a German orchestra was having tough sledding with Night and Day. A few officers were dancing with German girls but most of them sat around the walls staring into their cognac. Crepe curtains of homesickness and Saturday-night blues were settling down on the room so thick you could see them. When the music stopped the place was absolutely still.

An officer who'd been a police sergeant in Brooklyn had been sitting at a table with his head in his hands. Suddenly he lifted up his woebegone countenance and, with a voice stiff with gloom, croaked out, "I don't mind it when I'm on duty. As long as I can keep busy I feel all right. . . . It's the recreation that hurts."

The new master

MY FRIEND from Military Government is driving me home with him to lunch. The car leaves us on the steps of an undamaged modern residence in a corner of the compound. Beyond the barbed wire at the end of the street the ruin begins again. We walk through a library and sit down in a big bright drawing room with Chinese rugs. The place is neat and clean and warm. All the knickknacks are carefully dusted. The barbed wire outside the windows cuts the compound off from the suffering city. Double windows cut the drawing room off from the wintry day. Not a sound comes in to us as we sit in the brocaded chairs. You don't even have the feeling of being in Germany. Something about the way the Louis XVI furniture is arranged reminds me of the drawing room of a house I've occasionally visited in Grosse Pointe near Detroit. It might be the home of a $50,000-a-year man anywhere.

"This is really a general's house," my friend explains. "I was here with several other officers but they've all gone home and the billeting office seems to have forgotten me here."

A middle-aged German woman with crinkly blond hair in a maid's cap and uniform announces lunch. We sit at either end of an acre of white tablecloth piled with polished silverware and eat venison steak washed down by first-rate Burgundy.

"It's funny," my friend is saying, "but I don't have any appetite." Here he is, he explains with a shake of the head, all alone with a pack of servants. He can't get rid of them even when

LOOK TO THE LEADER for Good Safe Planes YOU Can Afford to Buy and Fly

"When you investigate today's airplane market, you'll find that Piper leads in sales because it leads in value, safety and economy." WILLIAM T. PIPER, President

In your Piper Cub you get the value of experience gained in building over 18,000 Cubs for peace and war—more than all other light planes combined. You benefit by the knowledge of designing planes that are practical and of manufacturing them in quantity.

The safety record of Piper Cubs is without parallel. That is because they are more than just easy-to-fly airplanes. Piper Cubs are maneuverable.

A new Piper Cub costs you less than any other 1946 plane—as little as $665 down—and with it you receive a free flying course! Moreover, its economy of operation and maintenance is unequalled. That's why it is first choice of airport operators as well as individual owners.

Illustrated is the Super Cruiser, three-passenger, 100-horsepower plane with an electric starter. This ship is the big sister of the two-passenger, 65-horsepower Piper Cub Special—a 1946 personalized version of the world-famous Cubs in which most of our military and civilian pilots won their wings.

Ask your Piper Cub Dealer for a free flight demonstration in one of the new Piper Cubs. See him always for sales . . . service . . . flight instruction . . . at your local airport.

he stops paying them. He guesses they came just for the heat and to smell the good food. He has one of the best cooks in Frankfurt but he can't seem to eat. My friend comes from the Great Lakes region back home. He was in the insurance business but he has always been interested in the National Guard. Although he was overage he gave up his business and left his wife and children because he thought he might be useful to the Army in Military Government. He'd had experience in municipal affairs at home. He'd gone to Charlottesville and Leavenworth and worked his head off. Well, they kept him cooped up in England until a month after D-day and then he got over to France and was put in charge of a detail moving dead horses off the streets. He didn't mind that, he explains. He'd been crazy to do anything that got him within the sound of gunfire but the way he thinks he really could be useful is as an expert in municipal finance.

"What are we trying to do!"

DRIVING into town in the twilight had been like driving through one of Dante's icy hells. In the freezing fog along the road we had passed men and women bowed under knapsacks and bundles of sticks, people in twos and threes pulling baby carriages and carts full of wood, old men pushing heavily loaded bicycles. We went along pounding the horn and blinking the lights of the jeep to try to get them to move out of the way. "Damn krauts," the driver kept muttering. "They git themselves run over just on purpose. I'd just as soon run 'em down as not."

At last we had groped our way through the crowded foggy unlit streets and reached the correspondents' hotel. We dragged our stiff limbs out of the open jeep. The lobby was warm and brightly lit. The bar wasn't open yet so the lieutenant and I went up to the bedroom to thaw ourselves out over the radiator. We stood at the window a moment, pulling the drenched gloves off our chilled fingers and looking down the shaft of light from the window through a gap in the wall of the hotel next door into an emptiness of dangling plumbing where a piece of a stairway with the red-flowered carpet on it stopped abruptly at nothing.

The lieutenant worked in Intelligence. He was a young man from Brooklyn with a thoughtful ruddy face and full lips.

Suddenly he sat down on the edge of the bed and started to talk. "My people are Jewish," he began, "so don't think I'm not bitter against the krauts. I'm for shooting the war criminals wherever we can prove they are guilty and getting it over with. But for God's sake tell me what we are trying to do."

He got up and began to walk back and forth. "I've been interrogating German officers for the War Crimes Commission and when I find them half starved to death right in our own PW cages and being treated like you wouldn't treat a dog, I ask myself some questions. All these directives about don't coddle the Germans have thrown open the gates for every criminal tendency we've got in us. Just because the Germans did these things is no reason for us to do them. Well, I know war isn't a pretty business but this isn't war any more. This is peace." He jumped to his feet. "Hell, let's go down and get a drink before I blow my top and start talking."

GERMAN POLICEMEN, unlike other residents of Frankfurt, lead fairly comfortable lives, have clean, warm clothes, good rations and some authority.

STEPS GOING DOWN are indicated to a blindfolded soldier by a change in the signal from his set. New sound now tells him that distance to the ground ahead has increased.

ON LEVEL GROUND again, the audible signal returns to normal. Steps down involve the exact reverse of the principle diagramed below for steps up.

BLIND MAN'S GUIDE

New range finder guides the steps of the blind with a beam of light

The technology of using echoes to determine the location of objects, which in the war was used as radar, is being used now in a potentially valuable aid to war-blinded U.S. soldiers. A portable "blind man's radar," designed by the U.S. Army Signal Corps at the request of the Surgeon General, uses light instead of radio waves to detect and give the range of obstacles from 3 to 30 feet away.

Carried by a blind man, the range-finder set scans the ground ahead with a beam of light. Part of the light is reflected from ground to the set where it produces an audible signal, heard by earphones, whose rate of repetition indicates the distance to the ground. When a person, building or curb intercepts the beam, the rate changes to give the range of the obstacle (see diagram below).

So far, experimental sets have been made and tested on blind soldiers. The results have been encouraging but much work still remains to be done before a practical device will be available.

RANGE FINDER DIAGRAM shows how device works in normal walking. Light source, an ordinary flashlight bulb, sends beam through a chopping disk which breaks beam up into 500 cycle-light, thus giving it a pattern which will enable set to distinguish it from other light. On level ground (above) light is reflected at narrow angle, is focused near center of revolving perforated coding cone. At this point, cone is perforated to break up light to produce four audible tones each quarter second. When step is ahead (right) light is reflected at wider angle, is focused farther out at edge of cone. Here perforations are arranged to double both rate of interruption and tones.

STEPS IN THE PATH of a blindfolded soldier produce a change in the audible signal (see diagram p. 121). The signal rate varies with distance to steps.

BUILDING is the next obstacle confronting the blindfolded soldier. His set tells him just how far away building is, thus letting him know when to turn.

APPROACHING PERSON is another common obstacle. Warned in time, blindfolded soldier stops and patiently waits for the other person to pass him.

Sometimes it's good to make customers dissatisfied

1. For 25 years it has been an accepted practice to change the oil in an automobile every 1,000 miles. With the motor oils we had before the war this was the only safe procedure. And the public had been told about it so long and so frequently, the habit was pretty well fixed.

2. During the war, however, Union developed an oil that would last a good deal longer than 1,000 miles. In fact, it had to be changed only two times a year. A few months after V-J day we were in a position to offer this New Triton to the motoring public.

3. At that point we had to make a decision. Should we advertise New Triton simply as a superior oil and let people go on changing it every 1,000 miles? Or should we give them the whole story and upset a buying habit that had been established for years?

4. If Union Oil had been a monopoly—private or governmental—we would probably have kept quiet. There's no incentive to go after more business when you already have it all. And when the customers are satisfied, the motto of most monopolies is "Don't Rock the Boat."

5. But we didn't have all the business. We were in competition. By telling the whole story on New Triton we stood to gain two things: good will from our present customers and additional business from the dissatisfied customers of our competitors. So we told it. The results justified our decision.

6. Furthermore they proved once again that as long as there's room for improvement in an industry, the only way to guarantee maximum progress is to have an economic system that guarantees maximum incentives. Our American system, with its free competition, provides these to a degree no other system has ever approached.

China aces start coast-to-coast air-freight business

TIGERS' COMBAT INSIGNIA

National Skyway Freight Corp. was put together by some veterans of the fabulous Flying Tigers who managed to come out of their war against Japan with both whole skins and good-sized sums of cash. When Pilot Robert Prescott told his ex-buddies that he needed money for an airline, 11 responded with enough to make an $87,000 bank roll and become partners. Matched with outside money, this bought eight transport planes and put the fliers into business last July as the first coast-to-coast U.S. air cargo line. With 30 pilots, mostly combat veterans, Skyway has logged 480,000 miles, hauling everything from flowers to race horses. Though still shaky financially, it is one of most promising of the many airlines started by wartime pilots.

SKYWAY'S FOUNDER and president, Bob Prescott, 32, checks orders with wife in Long Beach headquarters. An eight-plane ace, he planned line while flying Hump.

Time, patience and skill make the Champion

Ever since Americans first rode to hounds in 1739, fox hunters have demanded the best in horses, in equipment, and in whiskey for their stirrup cups. Life Goes to a Dancing School

A 77-year-old teacher in Waterbury, Conn. teaches young pupils everything from the two-step to the conga

LITTLE GIRLS put on short white gloves in the dressing room while undergoing last-minute hair-ribbon adjustments from mothers, who are not welcome at class itself.

LITTLE BOYS put on their gloves in the hall. Life expectancy of their gloves is not very high since most boys pull them off with their teeth, are constantly losing them.

PUPILS WAIT FOR THE FIRST EXERCISE TO BEGIN

BOBBIE LE MAY, 6, BOWS TO GARRIL GOSS, 5, WHO RETURNS HIM A CURTSY WITH STUDIED CONCENTRATION

As much a part of the cultural heritage of America as the corner saloon and the bingo game is the private dancing school where children in towns large and small the country over learn to bow and curtsy, turn toes out, walk in time to music and finally to clasp each other in the first tangled movement of what will eventually become recognizable as a waltz.

At Miss Slocum's Dancing School in Waterbury, Conn. 150 children, scrubbed and polished like apples in a delicatessen-store window, gather each Friday to learn dancing and deportment from Miss Benita Virginia Slocum. Miss Slocum is 77 years old and has been teaching dancing for 54 years. Currently she is explaining the conga and Lindy hop to the grandchildren of pupils to whom she once taught the mazurka. Emphasis in her classes is on dancing and manners. Girls wear simple dresses; boys wear blue suits. All wear washable white gloves. The boys who turn up with one glove, dirty gloves or no gloves feel very conspicuous, usually don't do it again. The lessons cost $25 a season.

PARTNERS having been chosen at foot of the stairs after much bowing, giggling and scuffling, pupils walk two by two through ballroom door to confront Miss Slocum.

BOYS BOW stiffly and girls curtsy to Miss Slocum (left) and her assistants, who are lined up to receive them. World-weary pupil, Peter Coe (left), is yawning, not singing.

MRS. WILEY (RIGHT) SHOWS THE QUEEN TO VISITOR CAROL SUNDQUIST.

California woman studies 100 friendly reptiles

The cuddling 12-foot king cobra female shown above is one of the most contented snakes in the world. Her name is The Queen and she is one of 100 reptiles belonging to Mrs. Grace Olive Wiley, a herpetologist who loves both her work and her snakes. Mrs. Wiley, her mother and her reptiles live together in a little house in North Long Beach, Calif. The snakes all snuggle up to Mrs. Wiley affectionately when she pets them and even when she calls them "honey" and "cutie pie." She keeps them for study and exhibits them publicly to keep them in mice, which is their principal diet. The Queen acted in a movie once and was so tired after the day's work that she wriggled right over to Mrs. Wiley and buried her head in her protector's skirt.

SAYS MRS. WILEY, "SHE WON'T HURT ANYBODY. COME UP AND PET HER"

A RATTLESNAKE WITH SORE THROAT gets sulfa washed down its throat with syringe. Next to cobras Mrs. Wiley says she likes rattlesnakes best.

Heat that flows

TO EVERY NOOK AND CRANNY

Is your bedroom colder than you like it on winter mornings? . . . Is your bathroom as warm as you would like it for the early morning shower or the evening tub? . . . Is your living room cold at one end? Are your floors cold and drafty?

Chances are that your home suffers from one or more of these discomforts which are difficult to cure with the present "on-and-off" control of heat supply, no matter how plentiful that supply may be at the source, the heating plant. But cheer up! There is good news ahead. Moduflow, the amazing new control system developed by Minneapolis-Honeywell, will provide a continuous flow of modulated heat to every nook and cranny of the modern home. It will put an end to the drafts and chilly periods caused by intermittent heat supply and save fuel now wasted by overheating at the ceiling.

Best news of all is that Moduflow can be easily and inexpensively installed right now, in your present automatic heating system. You don't have to wait until you build a new home. Of course, if you are planning to build, you should make your heating plant completely modern with a Moduflow control system. Get the whole story of Moduflow. HOW TO PICK UP A RATTLESNAKE

Mrs. Wiley's zoo contains two cobras, a boa constrictor, a python, a copperhead, lizards, Gila monsters and assorted rattlesnakes. All the snakes still have their poison sacs. She would let them roam over her grounds if the neighbors did not complain. But when a snake does get out she can easily pick it up as she demonstrates below. Says she without much fear of contradiction, "A snake will lose its fear of humans much faster than a human will lose his fear of snakes."

FIRST STEP in catching a loose rattlesnake is to approach it slowly but firmly. This is a red California rattlesnake, one of Mrs. Wylie's specimens.

PRONG-SHAPED ROD pins snake's head to ground. Although she decries fear of snakes, Mrs. Wylie does not recommend this trick for the untutored.

CATCHING THE SNAKE is done by grasping it back of the head. In 53 years she has been bitten about half-a-dozen times, has forgiven each biter.

Easter's comin'... Have a Coca-Cola

...or friendly refreshment is part of the fun

Getting ready for the big parade is plenty exciting, especially when friends gather 'round to have fun and admire the finery. That's a time for sparkling Coca-Cola. Have a Coke just naturally means It's fun to get together. Whenever people meet, you're liable to find Coca-Cola and the friendly pause—the pause that refreshes, happy moment of hospitality.
